(d) STATE ASSURANCES.—The Secretary shall not approve an application of a State under this section unless the State provides assurance satisfactory to the Secretary that—

(1) aggregate expenditures under the plan for long-term care services for individuals 65 years of age or older in any fiscal year under the project will not exceed the aggregate expenditures under the plan for such services for such individuals in the fiscal year in the absence of such project;

(2) there will be no reduction or limitation of benefits to any individual eligible for medical assistance under the State medicaid plan as a result of operation of the project;

(3) the State will continue to make long-term care services available under the plan, at least to the extent such services are made available under the plan as in effect before the date of such approval and could continue to be provided consistent with law;

(4) the State will not permit the sale of any qualified long-term care insurance policy under the project unless the State has determined that the policy meets requirements specified in subsection (e) and meets standards at least as stringent as those set forth in the NAIC Long-Term Care Insurance Model Act (as of June 1989) and the NAIC regulations implementing the Act (to the extent not inconsistent with the requirements of subsection (e));

(5) in the sale of long-term care insurance policies not covered under the project, the State will require, at or before the time of sale of such a policy, that there be a disclosure of the fact that purchase of such a policy will not provide potential benefits under title XIX of the Social Security Act, unlike such policies covered under the project;

(6) the State will guarantee the payment of benefits under qualified long-term care insurance policies sold under the project;

(7) the percentage of the income official poverty line, established by the State under section 1902(l)(2)(A)(i) of the Social Security Act is 185 percent;

(10) the State has actuarial guidelines regarding, and actuaries capable of evaluating, actuarial submissions of companies seeking to offer qualified long-term care insurance policies under the project; and

(11) the State has provided for a program of counseling residents of the State with respect to the purchase of long-term care insurance policies and alternative financial options for protection of assets.

No payments shall be made under section 1903(a) of the Social Security Act with respect to a State's performance of the guarantee required under paragraph (6).

(e) REQUIREMENTS FOR QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICIES.—The requirements specified in this subsection (respecting qualified long-term care insurance policies offered under the project in the State) are as follows:

(1) STANDARD FORMAT AND DISCLOSURE.—

(A) POLICY AND APPLICATION.—Each such long-term care insurance policy, and application for such a policy, shall be written in simple, easily understood English in a standard format (established by the State) providing standardized terms and disclosure.

(B) MARKETING MATERIAL.—Marketing materials used with respect to such a policy shall be written or otherwise stated in simple, easily understood English.

(C) REQUIRED DISCLOSURE.—No such long-term care insurance policy may be sold (or offered for sale) unless there is disclosed in writing, no later than the time of sale of the policy—

(i) the proportion of premiums collected (and interest and other revenues derived therefrom) which will be applied to payment of benefits, and

(ii) the potential benefits under title XIX of the Social Security Act associated under the project with purchase of such a policy.

(2) MINIMUM LOSS-RATIO.—Such a policy must guarantee over time, using generally accepted actuarial standards, that at least 70 percent of the amount of the premiums (and interest and other revenues derived therefrom) will be paid on benefits under the policy.

(3) STANDARD MINIMUM BENEFITS.—Each such long-term care insurance policy shall provide at least the following benefits, up to the maximum dollar level of benefits provided under (and specified on the face of) the plan under paragraph (4):

(A) NURSING FACILITY SERVICES.—Coverage of, and payment for, nursing facility services for individuals determined (in accordance with paragraph (5)) to require an institutional level of care.

(B) HOME AND COMMUNITY-BASED SERVICES.—Personal care services (including home health aide and homemaker services), home health services, and respite care in the individual's place of residence for individuals determined to be at risk of institutionalization without such services.

The policy may not impose any limits on the duration of the period of services under the policy, other than the maximum dollar level of benefits (which shall apply uniformly to all services). The payment levels established for services under the plan shall be adjusted at least annually to reflect the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers (all items; U.S. city average).

(4) SPECIFICATION OF MAXIMUM DOLLAR LEVEL OF BENEFITS.—Each such long-term care insurance policy shall specify a maximum dollar level of benefits. Such maximum dollar level of benefits shall be increased, in each year after the year following the year of its issuance, by the same percentage as the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers (all items; U.S. city average) from December of the year before the year the year of issuance to December of the year preceding the year involved.

(5) DETERMINATION OF BENEFIT ELIGIBILITY.—

(A) CASE MANAGEMENT REQUIRED.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall use a standard formula, set by the State and based on a uniform assessment instrument specified by the State, to determine the level of care appropriate for each case. Such formula must be applied by the State or a case-management agency which is independent of the issuer of the policy.

(B) NO HIGHER LEVEL OF CARE REQUIREMENT.—A long-term care insurance policy may not condition or limit eligibility for benefits—

(i) for noninstitutional benefits to the need for or receipt of institutional services,

(ii) for home care services to the need for or receipt of nursing care, or

(iii) for any benefits on the medical necessity for such benefits.

(C) APPEAL RIGHTS.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall provide for and specify procedures (meeting reasonable standards specified by the State) for the appeal of determinations of level of care made under subparagraph (A).

(6) LIMITATION BASED ON PRE-EXISTING CONDITION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as permitted under subparagraph (B), a long-term care insurance policy may not limit or delay an individual's eligibility for benefits based on a pre-existing condition.

(B) EXCEPTION.—A long-term care insurance policy may deny payments during the first 6 months of coverage for treatment respecting any condition that existed during the 6 months before the date of purchase of the policy.

(7) NO POST-CLAIMS CONDITIONING AND GUARANTEED RENEWABLE.—After a long-term care insurance policy has been issued, the issuer may not deny claims under the policy on any grounds other than fraud or a knowing misrepresentation in the application for the policy or deny renewal of the coverage other than on such grounds or the failure to make timely payment of premiums.

(8) MEDICAL UNDERWRITING, PREMIUMS, AND COST-SHARING.—

(A) NO MEDICAL UNDERWRITING.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clauses (ii) and (iii), an individual may not be discriminated against in the offering, renewal, or benefits under such a long-term care insurance policy based on the individual's medical condition.

(ii) TREATMENT OF INDIVIDUALS RECEIVING BENEFITS.—The issuer of a long-term care insurance policy may deny initial issuance of such a policy to an individual receiving long-term care services at the time of the application for issuance of the policy.

(iii) VARYING PREMIUMS BY AGE CLASSIFICATION.—Clause (i) shall not be construed as preventing the issuer of a long-term care insurance policy from varying the premiums based on the age classification of individuals at the time of issuance of the policy.

(B) LEVEL PREMIUMS.—Each such policy shall have periodic premiums that are the same for all individuals in the same age group who purchased such a policy when they were in the same age group. The premiums rates must be guaranteed for the duration of the policy and must be suspended during any period in which benefits are payable under the policy.

(C) NONDUPLICATION OF MEDICARE BENEFITS.—Each such policy shall provide that, to the extent not required under section 1862(b) of the Social Security Act, benefits are not payable under the policy for services for which payment may be made under title XVIII of such Act.

(D) REDUCED PAID-UP PROVISION.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall have a provision under which, if the policy lapses after 5 or more years of coverage, the policy will provide, without payment of any additional premiums, benefits equal to at least 30 percent of the maximum dollar level of benefits available at term, and, after subsequent periods of coverage, the policy will provide, without payment of any additional premium, benefits equal to at least an increased percentage (established by the Secretary) of the maximum dollar level of benefits available at term.

(E) ADDITIONAL CONSUMER PROTECTIONS.—Each long-term care policy meets such standards relating to compensation arrangements, advertising, marketing, and appropriateness of purchase which the Secretary finds are equal to, or more stringent than, the requirements specified in sections 12, 15, 16, and 17 of Model Regulation to Implement the NAIC Medicare Supplement Insurance Minimum Standards Act (as adopted by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners as of December 7, 1989).

(9) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—The issuer of the long-term care policy will make available to the State and the Secretary (upon request) information respecting the utilization of benefits (and payments) under the policy, the health status of individuals purchasing such policies, and such other information as the Secretary may require, including information on lapse rates, rescissions, application denials, payment denials, and complaints received.

(f) PROHIBITED SALES PRACTICES.—

(1) DUTY OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING.—Each individual who is selling or offering for sale a long-term care insurance policy under the demonstration project has a duty of good faith and fair dealing to the purchaser or potential purchaser of such a policy.

(2) SPECIFIC PRACTICES.—An individual who is selling or offering for sale such a long-term care insurance policy—

(A) may not complete the medical history portion of an application;

(B) may not knowingly sell such a policy to provide benefits to an individual who is eligible for benefits under a State plan approved under title XIX of the Social Security Act (other than only because of the operation of the demonstration project); and

(C) may not sell such a policy knowing that the policy provides coverage that duplicates coverage already provided and may not sell a long-term care insurance policy for the benefit of an individual unless the individual (or a representative of the individual) provides a written statement to the effect that the coverage does not duplicate other coverage in effect.

(3) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY.—Any person who sells a long-term care insurance policy under the demonstration project in violation of requirements imposed under subsection (e) or who violates paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation. The provisions of section 1128A of the Social Security Act (other than the first sentence of subsection (a) and other than subsection (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under the previous sentence in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a) of such Act.

(g) APPLICATION, DURATION, AND ELIGIBILITY.—

(1) An application to the Secretary from the State for approval of the project shall be deemed granted unless the Secretary, within 90 days after the date of its submission to the Secretary, either denies such application in writing or informs the State in writing with respect to any additional information which is needed in order to make a final determination with respect to the application. After the date the Secretary receives such additional information, the application shall be deemed granted unless the Secretary, within 90 days of such date, denies such application.

(2) Any termination of a project shall not affect covered long-term care beneficiaries who purchased qualified long-term care insurance policies before the termination date.

(h) ANNUAL STATE REPORTS.—The State shall annually (during the duration of such project) report to the Secretary on—

CHAPTER 4—IMPROVEMENT OF THE MANAGEMENT OF THE TONGASS NATIONAL FOREST

SEC. 5241. MANAGEMENT OF THE TONGASS NATIONAL FOREST.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the commercial fishing, recreation, timber, and tourism industries each make a substantial contribution to the economy of southeast Alaska and their ability to contribute in the future depends upon balanced planning and management of the Tongass National Forest; and

(2) the Secretary of Agriculture should plan and manage the Tongass National Forest in a manner that adequately protects and enhances fish, wildlife, and recreation resources, as well as timber, and should act in the long-term best interests of all natural resources dependent industries and subsistence communities in southeast Alaska.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this section are to require the Secretary of Agriculture to—

(1) assess the extent to which planning and management of the Tongass National Forest prior to the enactment of this Act has differed from planning for, and management of, other national forests; and

(2) change, in conformance with laws applicable to the National Forest System, planning and management priorities regarding the Tongass National Forest so as to assure that greater emphasis is given to the long-term best interests of the commercial fishing, recreation, and tourism industries, subsistence communities in southeast Alaska, and the national interest in the fish and wildlife and other natural resources of the Tongass National Forest.

(c) DIRECTIVE.—The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to take such steps as are necessary in current management practices and in revisions of the Tongass land management plan to achieve the purposes described in subsection (b).

(d) OLD-GROWTH FOREST MANAGEMENT.—In developing the land management plan for the Tongass National Forest pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, the Secretary shall—

(1) provide for sustained production of old-growth forest resources within the Tongass National Forest; and

(2) upon completion of the draft of such plan, which shall be completed in any event not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, report to the Committees on Agriculture and on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate on provisions incorporated into such plan to meet the objective set forth in paragraph (1). The report shall include—

(A) the definition of the term "old-growth forest" used for purposes of such plan;

(B) the quantity and distribution of old-growth forest in the Tongass National Forest;

(C) the management objectives and guidelines incorporated into such plan to provide for sustained production of old-growth forest resources;

(D) the criteria used to determine how to integrate old-growth forest management objectives into the plan; and

(E) the relationship between old-growth forest management objectives and other resource management goals affecting timber, fish and wildlife, water quality, recreation, subsistence uses, and aesthetics.

Subtitle C—Oil Shale Claims Reform

SEC. 5301. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that:

(1) Certain oil shale mining claims were located pursuant to the General Mining Act of May 10, 1872, before enactment of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920, which provides for the leasing of that mineral.

(2) Section 37 of the Mineral Leasing Act permitted oil shale claims that were "maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated" to be perfected under such laws.

(3) The holders of those oil shale claims that have not been patented have been afforded ample opportunity to apply for patents over the last 70 years but have failed to take such action.

(4) Both the Mining Act of 1872 and the Mineral Leasing Act were intended to accomplish the development of the mineral resources of the Nation, including oil shale.

(5) Almost none of the oil shale claims have been developed for their oil shale in the intervening 70 years.

(6) The continued existence of these oil shale claims restricts the lands from the development of other minerals which may exist on the claimed lands.

(7) The continued existence of these oil shale claims interferes with the effective management of Federal lands.

(8) Issuing patents at this time for claims for which a right to patent has not vested would likely result in nonmineral development contrary to the intent of the Mining Act of 1872 and the Mineral Leasing Act.

(9) The lands embraced in an unpatented claim remain subject to the disposing power of the Congress until all conditions imposed by law for issuance of a patent are fully satisfied.

(10) Either the conversion of valid oil shale claims to leases or requiring diligent work toward production on such claims, together with the cancellation of invalid claims, would promote mineral development including for oil shale.

(11) It is in the public interest for these claims to be brought to some final resolution so that Federal lands affected may be properly managed for their mineral and other values in accordance with the laws and policies of the United States.

SEC. 5302. AMENDMENT TO THE MINERAL LEASING ACT.

Section 37 of the Mineral Leasing Act (30 U.S.C. 193) is amended by inserting "(a)" before the first sentence and by adding the following new subsections at the end thereof:

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Interior shall undertake an expedited program to determine the validity of all unpatented oil shale claims referred to in subsection (a). The expedited program shall include an examination of all unpatented oil shale claims, including those for which a patent application has not been filed. If a claim is determined to be invalid, the Secretary shall promptly declare the claim to be null and void and cancel it.

"(2) Not later than 30 days after the enactment of this subsection the Secretary shall publish proposed regulations in the Federal Register containing standards and criteria for determining the validity of all unpatented oil shale claims referred to in subsection (a). Final regulations shall be promulgated within 180 days after the date such proposed regulations are published. The Secretary shall make a determination with respect to the validity of each such claim within 2 years after the promulgation of such final regulations. In making such determinations the Secretary shall give priority to those claims which meet the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (c) and subsection (f).

"(c) Except as provided in subsection (f), after January 24, 1989, no patent shall be issued by the United States for any oil shale claim referred to in subsection (a) unless the Secretary of the Interior determines that, for the claim concerned—

"(1) a patent application was filed with the Secretary on or before January 24, 1989, and

"(2) all requirements established under sections 2329, 2330, 2331, and 2333 of the Revised Statutes (30 U.S.C. 35, 36, and 37) were fully complied with by that date.

"(d)(1) The holder of each oil shale claim for which no patent may be issued by reason of subsection (c) shall make an election under paragraph (2) or paragraph (3) of this subsection. Not later than 30 days after the enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall notify the holder of each such claim of the requirement to make such election. The holder shall make the election by certified mail within 60 days after receiving such notification. Failure to make an election within such period, shall be deemed conclusively to constitute a forfeiture of the claim and the claim shall be null and void.

"(2) The holder of a claim required to make an election under this subsection may elect to apply to the Secretary for a lease under section 21. The Secretary shall promptly provide a lease application to any claimholder who makes such election and the claimholder shall file an application for a lease within 90 days after receiving such application. Upon receiving such an application the Secretary shall issue a lease to the holder of such claim for the area covered by the claim if the claim is determined to be valid. A lease under this paragraph shall be issued in accordance with the provisions of section 21 except as follows:

"(A) The term of the lease shall be 20 years and for so long thereafter as oil shale or associated minerals are produced annually in commercial quantities from the lease.

"(B) The acreage limitations contained in section 21(a) shall not apply.

"(C) The first and second provisos of section 21(a) shall not apply.

"(D) The limitation on the number of leases to be granted to any one person, association, or corporation contained in section 21(a) shall not apply.

"(E) The phrase 'oil shale and gilsonite' in the first sentence of section 21(a) shall be construed to include oil shale and all other associated minerals.

"(3)(A) The holder of a claim making an election under this subsection may elect to maintain the claim by complying with such requirements as the Secretary shall prescribe, by rule, to assure that, during each year that oil shale or associated minerals are not being produced from the claim in commercial quantities, the holder of such claim either makes payments in lieu of diligent development under subparagraph (B) or expends an amount annually which—

"(i) represents diligent efforts toward the production of oil shale or associated minerals (or both),

"(ii) includes substantial work on the claim, and

"(iii) represents not less than $5,000 worth of expenditure on the claim.

"(B) In lieu of making the expenditure described in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) in any year, the holder of such claim may pay the Secretary an amount equal to $5,000 for the claim for that year. Moneys received by the Secretary under this subparagraph shall be disposed of in the same manner as moneys received pursuant to section 35, except that 50 percent of such moneys shall be transferred to the States and 50 percent shall be deposited in the General Fund of the Treasury.

"(C) The Secretary shall promulgate a final rule under this paragraph within 90 days after the enactment of this subsection. The annual expenditure requirement under such rule shall take effect on the first day of the first month of September which occurs more than 90 days after the enactment of this subsection.

"(D) The Secretary shall review the expenditures made for each such claim not less frequently than annually.

"(E) In applying the provisions of section 314 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1744), the holder of a claim for which an election under this paragraph has been made shall comply with the provisions of subsection (a)(1) thereof only by filing (as provided in such provisions) an affidavit that the annual expenditure (or annual payments in lieu of diligent development) requirements of this paragraph have been met with respect to such claim or that oil shale or associated minerals are being produced from the claim in commercial quantities.

"(F) Failure to comply with the requirements of this paragraph and the requirements of such section 314(a)(1) shall be deemed conclusively to constitute a forfeiture of the claim and the claim shall be null and void. In addition, the Secretary shall declare a claim to be null and void and cancel it on the earlier of the following:

"(i) The date on which the Secretary determines that oil shale and associated minerals are exhausted.

"(ii) The date 100 years after the date of location of the claim.

On the date referred to in clause (ii), the Secretary shall make a determination under this subparagraph and if the Secretary determines that oil shale or associated minerals are being produced in commercial quantities there shall be substituted for such date the date on which the Secretary determines that oil shale or associated minerals cease to be produced from the claim in commercial quantities.

"(G) The provisions of sections 4 and 6 of the Act of August 13, 1954 (30 U.S.C. 524 and 526), popularly known as the Multiple Minerals Development Act, and the provisions of section 4 of the Act of July 23, 1955 (30 U.S.C. 612), popularly known as the Surface Resources Act, shall apply to claims for which an election under this paragraph has been made in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions apply to the mining claims referred to therein.

"(e) In addition to other applicable requirements, any person who holds a lease pursuant to paragraph (2) of subsection (d) or who maintains a claim pursuant to paragraph (3) of subsection (d) or pursuant to subsection (f) shall be required, by regulation, to reclaim the site subject to such lease or claim and to post a surety bond or provide other types of financial guarantee satisfactory to the Secretary before disturbance of the site to ensure such reclamation. The Secretary shall promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to implement this subsection.

"(f)(1) If a patent application was filed with the Secretary before January 24, 1989, for an oil shale claim referred to in subsection (a) but all requirements established under sections 2329, 2330, 2331, and 2333 of the Revised Statutes (30 U.S.C. 35, 36, and 37) were not fully complied with by that date, the Secretary may issue a patent under this subsection notwithstanding the failure to meet those requirements by that date if such requirements are subsequently met and the Secretary determines the claim to be valid (after review as provided in subsection (c)). The patent shall be limited to the oil shale and associated minerals on such claim. Upon compliance with such requirements, such patent may be issued upon payment to the Secretary of $2,000 per acre.

"(2) Any patent under this subsection shall be subject to an express reservation of the surface of the affected lands, and the provisions of sections 4 and 6 of the Act of August 13, 1954 (30 U.S.C. 524 and 526), popularly known as the Multiple Minerals Development Act, and of section 4 of the Act of July 23, 1955 (30 U.S.C. 612), popularly known as the Surface Resources Act, shall apply to such claim in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions apply to the unpatented mining claims referred to in such provisions.

"(3) No claimholder having a claim described in this subsection shall be required to make an election under subsection (d).".

SEC. 5403. ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.

Section 402(g) of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 1232(g)) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—(1) Moneys deposited into the fund shall be allocated by the Secretary to accomplish the purposes of this subtitle as follows:

"(A) 50 percent of the reclamation fees collected annually in any State (other than fees collected with respect to Indian lands) shall be allocated annually by the Secretary to the State, subject to such State having each of the following—

"(i) An approved abandoned mine reclamation program pursuant to section 405.

"(ii) Lands, waters, and facilities which are eligible pursuant to section 404 (in the case of a State not certified under section 411(a)) or pursuant to section 411(b) (in the case of a State certified under section 411(a)).

"(B) 50 percent of the reclamation fees collected annually with respect to Indian lands shall be allocated annually by the Secretary to the Indian tribe having jurisdiction over such lands, subject to such tribe having each of the following—

"(i) An approved abandoned mine reclamation program pursuant to section 405.

"(ii) Lands, waters, and facilities which are eligible pursuant to section 404 (in the case of an Indian tribe not certified under section 411(a)) or pursuant to section 411(b) (in the case of a tribe certified under section 411(a)).

"(C) The funds allocated by the Secretary under this paragraph to States and Indian tribes shall only be used for annual reclamation project construction and program administration grants.

"(D) To the extent not expended within 3 years after the date of any grant award under this paragraph, such grant shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary in any area under paragraph (2), (3), (4), or (5).

"(2) 20 percent of the amounts available in the fund in any fiscal year which are not allocated under paragraph (1) in that fiscal year (including that interest accruing as provided in section 401(e) and including funds available for reallocation pursuant to paragraph (1)(C)), shall be allocated to the Secretary only for the purpose of making the annual transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 401(c)(2).

"(3) Amounts available in the fund which are not allocated to States and Indian tribes under paragraph (1) or allocated under paragraph (2) and paragraph (5) are authorized to be expended by the Secretary for any of the following:

"(A) For the purpose of section 507(c), either directly or through grants to the States, subject to the limitation contained in section 401(c)(11).

"(B) For the purpose of section 410 (relating to emergencies).

"(C) For the purpose of meeting the objectives of the fund set forth in section 403(a) for eligible lands, waters, and facilities pursuant to section 404 in States and on Indian lands where the State or Indian tribe does not have an approved abandoned mine reclamation program pursuant to section 405.

"(D) For the administration of this subtitle by the Secretary.

"(4)(A) Amounts available in the fund which are not allocated under paragraphs (1), (2), and (5) or expended under paragraph (3) in any fiscal year are authorized to be expended by the Secretary under this paragraph for the reclamation or drainage abatement of lands and waters within unreclaimed sites which were mined for coal or which were affected by such mining, wastebanks, coal processing or other coal mining processes and left in an inadequate reclamation status.

"(B) Funds made available under this paragraph may be used for reclamation or drainage abatement at a site referred to in subparagraph (A) if the Secretary makes either of the following findings:

"(i) A finding that the coal mining operation occurred during the period beginning on August 4, 1977, and ending on or before the date on which the Secretary approved a State program pursuant to section 503 for State in which the site is located, and that any funds for reclamation or abatement which are available pursuant to a bond or other form of financial guarantee or from any other source are not sufficient to provide for adequate reclamation or abatement at the site.

"(ii) A finding that the surety of the mining operator became insolvent prior to the date of enactment of this paragraph, and as of such date, funds immediately available from proceedings relating to such insolvency, or from any financial guarantee or other source are not sufficient to provide for adequate reclamation or abatement at the site.

"(C) In determining which sites to reclaim pursuant to this paragraph, the Secretary shall follow the priorities stated in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 403(a). The Secretary shall ensure that priority is given to those sites which are in the immediate vicinity of a residential area or which have an adverse economic impact upon a local community.

"(D) Amounts collected from the assessment of civil penalties under section 518 are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this paragraph.

"(E) Any State may expend grants made available under paragraphs (1) and (5) for reclamation and abatement of any site referred to in subparagraph (A) if the State, with the concurrence of the Secretary, makes either of the findings referred to in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (B) and if the State determines that the reclamation priority of the site is the same or more urgent than the reclamation priority for eligible lands and waters pursuant to section 404 under the priorities stated in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 403(a).

"(F) For the purposes of the certification referred to in section 411(a), sites referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be considered as having the same priorities as those stated in section 403(a) for eligible lands and waters pursuant to section 404. All sites referred to in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph within any State shall be reclaimed prior to such State making the certification referred to in section 411(a).

"(5) The Secretary shall allocate 40 percent of the amount in the fund after making the allocation referred to in paragraph (1) for making additional annual grants to States and Indian tribes which are not certified under section 411(a) to supplement grants received by such States and Indian tribes pursuant to paragraph (1)(C) until the priorities stated in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 403(a) have been achieved by such State or Indian tribe. The allocation of such funds for the purpose of making such expenditures shall be through a formula based on the amount of coal historically produced in the State or from the Indian lands concerned prior to August 3, 1977. Funds allocated or expended by the Secretary under paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of this subsection for any State or Indian tribe shall not be deducted against any allocation of funds to the State or Indian tribe under paragraph (1) or under this paragraph.

"(6) Any State may receive and retain, without regard to the 3-year limitation referred to in paragraph (1)(D), up to 10 percent of the total of the grants made annually to such State under paragraphs (1) and (5) if such amounts are deposited into either—

"(A) a special trust fund established under State law pursuant to which such amounts (together with all interest earned on such amounts) are expended by the State solely to achieve the priorities stated in section 403(a) after the year 2007, or

"(B) an acid mine drainage abatement and treatment fund established under State law as provided in paragraph (7).

"(7)(A) Any State may establish under State law an acid mine drainage abatement and treatment fund from which amounts (together with all interest earned on such amounts) are expended by the State to implement, in consultation with the Soil Conservation Service, acid mine drainage abatement and treatment plans approved by the Secretary. Such plans shall provide for the comprehensive abatement of the causes and treatment of the effects of acid mine drainage within qualified hydrologic units affected by coal mining practices.

"(B) The plan shall include, but shall not be limited to, each of the following:

"(i) An identification of the qualified hydrologic unit.

"(ii) The extent to which acid mine drainage is affecting the water quality and biological resources within the hydrologic unit.

"(iii) An identification of the sources of acid mine drainage within the hydrologic unit.

"(iv) An identification of individual projects and the measures proposed to be undertaken to abate and treat the causes or effects of acid mine drainage with the hydrologic unit.

"(v) The cost of undertaking the proposed abatement and treatment measures.

"(vi) An identification of existing and proposed sources of funding for such measures.

"(vii) An analysis of the cost-effectiveness and environmental benefits of abatement and treatment measures.

"(C) The Secretary may approve any plan under this paragraph only after determining that such plan meets the requirements of this paragraph. In conducting an analysis of the items referred to in clauses (iv), (v), and (vii) the Director of the Office of Surface Mining shall obtain the comments of the Director of the Bureau of Mines. In approving plans under this paragraph, the Secretary shall give a priority to those plans which will be implemented in coordination with measures undertaken by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 406.

"(D) For purposes of this paragraph the term 'qualified hydrologic unit' means a hydrologic unit—

"(i) in which the water quality has been significantly affected by acid mine drainage from coal mining practices in a manner which adversely impacts biological resources; and

"(ii) which contains lands and waters which are—

"(I) eligible pursuant to section 404 and include any of the priorities stated in section 403(a); and

"(II) proposed to be the subject of the expenditures by the State (from amounts available from the forfeiture of bonds required under section 509 or from other State sources) to mitigate acid mine drainage.

"(8) Of the funds available for expenditure under this subsection in any fiscal year the Secretary shall allocate annually not less than $2,000,000 for expenditure in each State, and for each Indian tribe, having an approved abandoned mine reclamation program pursuant to section 405 and, eligible lands, waters, and facilities pursuant to section 404 so long as an allocation of funds to such State or such tribe is necessary to achieve the priorities stated in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 403(a).".

SEC. 5404. FUND OBJECTIVES.

Section 403 of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 1233) is amended as follows:

(1) Insert "(a) PRIORITIES.—" after "SEC. 403.".

(2) Strike "lands and water" and insert "lands, waters, and facilities".

(3) Insert ", except as provided for under section 411," after "title".

(4) Insert "and" after paragraph (2).

(5) Strike paragraphs (4), (5), and (6).

(6) Add at the end the following new subsections:

"(b) UTILITIES AND OTHER FACILITIES.—(1) Reclamation projects involving the protection, repair, replacement, construction or enhancement of utilities, such as those relating to water supply, roads and such other facilities serving the public adversely affected by coal mining practices shall be deemed part of the objectives set forth, and undertaken as they relate to, the priorities stated in subsection (a).

"(2) Any State or Indian tribe not certified under section 411(a) may expend up to 30 percent of the funds allocated to such State or Indian tribe in any year through the grants made available under paragraphs (1) and (5) of section 402(g) for the purpose of protecting, repairing, replacing, constructing, or enhancing facilities relating to water supply, including water distribution facilities and treatment plants, to replace water supplies adversely affected by coal mining practices.

"(3) If the adverse effect on water supplies referred to in this subsection occurred both prior to and after August 3, 1977, section 404 shall not be construed to prohibit a State or Indian tribe referred to in paragraph (2) from using funds referred to in such paragraph for the purposes of this subsection if the State or Indian tribe determines that such adverse effects occurred predominantly prior to August 3, 1977.

Subtitle B—Coastal Zone Management

SEC. 7201. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Coastal Zone Act Reauthorization Amendments of 1990".

SEC. 7202. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 has not been subject to comprehensive review and amendment since 1980.

(2) The pressures of population growth are steadily increasing in the coastal zone, as illustrated by the fact that—

(A) over one-half of the people of the United States live and work within coastal counties which encompass less than 10 percent of the United States land mass;

(B) the population density of coastal counties is 5 times greater than noncoastal counties nationwide; and

(C) growth around sensitive coastal ecosystems will continue;

(3) population growth in the coastal zone manifests itself in various ways, including—

(A) increased pollution of coastal waters, particularly from nonpoint sources such as parking lots, roads, and farms;

(B) loss of wetlands and other vital habitat;

(C) diminishing opportunities for public access to shorelines; and

(D) heightened vulnerability of coastal communities to natural hazards and sea level rise; and

(4) because global warming may cause a substantial rise in sea level with serious adverse affects on the coastal zone, coastal States should be encouraged and assisted in planning for such occurrences.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this subtitle are to—

(1) establish the improvement of coastal resource protection as a priority national goal under the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972;

(2) establish improved incentives for State and local action to achieve better coastal resource protection;

(3) revitalize the Federal coastal management program by establishing a mandate for Federal leadership and technical and financial assistance in support of improved coastal zone management at the regional, State, and local levels; and

(4) encourage voluntary participation by all eligible coastal States in programs established under title II of this Act, by setting a goal of 100 percent State participation by the end of fiscal year 1995.

SEC. 7203. REAUTHORIZATION OF COASTAL ZONE MANAGEMENT ACT OF 1972.

The Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1451-1464) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE III—MANAGEMENT OF THE COASTAL ZONE

"SEC. 301. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Coastal Zone Management Act'.

"SEC. 302. FINDINGS.

"The Congress finds the following:

"(1) It is in the national interest of the United States to manage, protect, and develop with proper environmental safeguards, the coastal zone.

"(2) The coastal zone is rich in a variety of natural, commercial, recreational, ecological, historical, cultural, industrial, and esthetic resources of importance to the United States.

"(3) The increasing and competing demands upon the lands and waters of the coastal. zone occasioned by population growth and economic development, including requirements for industry, commerce, residential development, recreation, extraction of mineral resources and fossil fuels, transportation and navigation, waste disposal, and harvesting of fish, shellfish, and other living coastal resources, have resulted in severe degradation of coastal water quality, the decline of living coastal resources and wildlife, permanent and adverse changes to ecological systems, decreasing open space for public use, and shoreline erosion.

"(4) The coastal zone, and the fish, shellfish, other living coastal resources, and wildlife therein, are ecologically fragile and consequently extremely vulnerable to destruction by human alteration.

"(5) Important ecological, cultural, historic, and esthetic values of the coastal zone which are essential to the well-being of all citizens of the United States must be protected.

"(6) New and expanding demands for food, energy, minerals, defense needs, recreation, waste disposal, transportation, and industrial activities in the Great Lakes, territorial sea, Exclusive Economic Zone, and Outer Continental Shelf are damaging these areas and create the need for resolution of conflicts among competing uses and values in coastal and ocean waters.

"(7) Special natural and scenic characteristics of the coastal zone are being damaged by ill-planned development that threatens these values;

"(8) In view of competing demands and the urgent need to protect and give priority to maintaining natural systems in the coastal zone, present State and local capabilities to plan for and regulate land and water uses in these areas are inadequate.

"(9) The key to more effective protection of the land and water resources of the coastal zone is to encourage coastal States to exercise their full authority over the lands and waters in the coastal zone by assisting coastal States, in cooperation with the Federal and local governments and other vitally affected interests, in developing land and water use programs for the coastal zone, including unified policies, criteria, standards, methods, and processes for managing land and water uses in the coastal zone, as well as uses which, although outside of the coastal zone, will affect natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone.

"(10) Beneficial use of the land and water resources of the coastal zone requires consideration of activities which are of more than local significance.

"(11) Land use in the coastal zone, and the use of adjacent lands which drain into the coastal zone, may significantly affect the quality of coastal waters and habitat, and efforts to control coastal water pollution from land use activities must be improved.

"(12) Expeditious and environmentally sound development of offshore energy resources is best achieved through coordination of that development with State coastal zone management programs.

"(13) The attainment by the United States of a greater degree of energy self-sufficiency will be advanced by providing Federal financial assistance to meet State and local needs resulting from energy activity in or affecting the coastal zone.

"(14) Implementation of the public trust doctrine through federally-approved State coastal zone management plans will ensure that coastal States exercise their full authority over the lands, waters, and resources within their coastal zones fully and in accordance with that doctrine.

"SEC. 303. DECLARATION OF POLICY.

"The Congress declares that it is the policy of the United States—

"(1) to preserve, protect, develop with proper environmental safeguards, and where possible restore or enhance, the resources of the coastal zone for this and succeeding generations;

"(2) to encourage and assist coastal States to exercise effectively their responsibilities in the coastal zone through the development, implementation and continual improvement of management programs to achieve wise use of the air, land, water, mineral, and living resources of the coastal zone, giving full consideration to ecological, cultural, historic, and esthetic values and to needs for economic development;

"(3) that the management programs approved under section 306 shall include provisions for—

"(A) protecting natural resources, including wetlands, floodplains, estuaries, beaches, dunes, maritime forests, barrier islands, coral reefs, and fish and wildlife and their habitat, within the coastal zone;

"(B) managing coastal development to minimize—

"(i) the loss of life and property caused by improper development in flood-prone, storm surge, geologically hazardous, and erosion-prone areas; and in areas likely to be affected by sea level rise, land subsidence, and saltwater intrusion; and

"(ii) the destruction of natural protective features, such as beaches, dunes, wetlands, maritime forests, and barrier islands;

"(C) managing coastal development to protect and restore the quality of coastal waters and to prevent the impairment of existing uses of those waters;

"(D) giving priority to water-dependent uses adjacent to coastal waters over other uses;

"(E) orderly processes for—

"(i) siting major facilities related to national defense, energy, fisheries development, recreation, ports, and transportation; and

"(ii) locating new commercial and industrial development, to the maximum extent practicable, in or adjacent to areas where such development already exists;

"(F) public access to the coasts for recreation purposes;

"(G) assisting in the redevelopment of deteriorating urban waterfronts and ports, and preservation and restoration of historic, cultural, and esthetic coastal features;

"(H) coordinating and simplifying of procedures to ensure expedited governmental decisionmaking for the management of coastal resources;

"(I) continued consultation and coordination with, and the giving of adequate consideration to, the views of affected Federal agencies;

"(J) timely and effective notification of, and opportunities for public and local government participation in, coastal management decisionmaking;

"(K) assistance to support comprehensive planning, conservation, and management for living coastal resources, including planning for the siting of pollution control and aquaculture facilities within the coastal zone, and improved coordination between State and Federal coastal zone management agencies, and State water quality and fish and wildlife agencies;

"(L) where the Under Secretary considers appropriate, the study, development and implementation of management plans to address the adverse impacts of sea level rise and Great Lakes level rise on the coastal zone, including coastal drinking water supplies, coastal infrastructure, ports and harbors, energy facilities, coastal wetlands and other critical coastal habitat, housing, and storm surge protection; and

"(M) an inventory and designation of areas that contain one or more coastal resources of national significance, including criteria and procedures for public nomination of such areas;

"(4) to encourage the preparation of special area management plans which provide for increased specificity in protecting—

"(A) significant natural resources;

"(B) reasonable water-dependent economic growth;

"(C) improved protection of life and property in hazardous areas, including specifically those areas likely to be affected by sea level rise; and

"(D) improved predictability in governmental decisionmaking; and

"(5) to encourage the participation and cooperation of the public, State and local governments, interstate and other regional agencies, and Federal agencies having programs affecting the coastal zone, in carrying out the purposes of this title.

"SEC. 304. DEFINITIONS.

"For the purposes of this title—

The coastal zone does not include lands the use of which is by law subject solely to the discretion of, or which is held in trust by, the Federal Government or its officers or agents.

"(6) CRITICAL COASTAL AREA.—The term 'critical coastal area' means an area identified on the basis of geological, hydrological, and ecological factors and proximity to sensitive coastal waters, wetlands and habitats, to be an area for which there is a significant likelihood that any new or expanded land use will have an adverse effect on coastal waters, either directly or through cumulative or secondary effects, unless appropriate land use management measures are employed.

"(7) ENFORCEABLE POLICY.—The term 'enforceable policy' means State policies which are legally binding through constitutional provisions, laws, regulations, land use plans, ordinances, or judicial or administrative decisions, by which a State exerts control over private and public land and water uses and natural resources in the coastal zone.

The amount of any such grant shall not exceed $200,000 in any fiscal year, and shall require State matching funds according to a 4-to-one ratio of Federal-to-State contributions. After an initial grant is made to a coastal State pursuant to this subsection, no subsequent grant shall be made to that coastal State pursuant to this subsection unless the Under Secretary finds that the coastal State is satisfactorily developing its management program. No coastal State is eligible to receive more than 2 grants pursuant to this subsection.

"(2) DEVELOPING PROGRAMS.—For States for which programs are approved after the date of the enactment of the Coastal Zone Act Reauthorization Amendments of 1990, 4 to one for the first fiscal year, 2.3 to one for the second fiscal year, 1.5 to one for the third fiscal year, and one to one for each fiscal year thereafter.

"(b) GRANT CONDITIONS.—The Under Secretary may make a grant to a coastal State under subsection (a) only if the Under Secretary finds that the management program of the coastal State meets all applicable requirements of this title and has been approved in accordance with subsection (d).

"(c) GRANT ALLOCATION.—Grants under this section shall be allocated to coastal States with approved programs based on rules and regulations promulgated by the Under Secretary which shall take into account the extent and nature of the shoreline and area covered by the program, population of the area, and other relevant factors. "(8) NATIONAL INTEREST.—The management program provides for adequate consideration of the national interest involved in planning for, and managing the coastal zone, including the siting of facilities such as energy facilities which are of greater than local significance. In the case of energy facilities, the Under Secretary shall find that the State has given consideration to any applicable national or interstate energy plan or program.

"(9) AREA DESIGNATIONS.—The management program includes procedures whereby specific areas may be designated for the purpose of preserving or restoring them for their conservation, recreational, ecological, historical, or esthetic values.

"(10) AUTHORITY TO IMPLEMENT PROGRAM.—The State, acting through its chosen agency or agencies (including local governments, areawide agencies, regional agencies, or interstate agencies) has authority for the management of the coastal zone in accordance with the management program. "(13) PROTECTION OF NATIONALLY SIGNIFICANT RESOURCES.—The management program provides for—

"(A) the inventory and designation of areas that contain one or more coastal resources of national significance; and

"(B) specific and enforceable standards to protect such resources.

"(14) PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—The management program provides for public participation in permitting processes, consistency determinations, and other similar decisions.

"(e) PROGRAM AMENDMENTS AND MODIFICATIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A coastal State may amend, modify, or otherwise change its approved management program as provided in this subsection.

"(2) NOTIFICATION REQUIRED.—A coastal State shall promptly notify the Under Secretary of any proposed amendment, modification, or change in its management program and submit it to the Under Secretary for his or her approval. The Under Secretary may suspend all or part of any grant made to the State under this section pending submission of the proposed amendment, modification, or change by the State.

"(3) REVIEW AND APPROVAL BY UNDER SECRETARY.—(A) Within 30 days after the date the Under Secretary receives any amendment, modification, or other change proposed by a coastal State to its management program, the Under Secretary shall approve or disapprove the proposal, unless the Under Secretary finds it is necessary to extend the period for reviewing the proposal. Upon such a finding, the Under Secretary may extend the period for review to not later than 120 days after the date the Under Secretary received the proposal. The Under Secretary may further extend the period for review only as necessary to meet the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.).

"(B) If the Under Secretary does not approve or disapprove an amendment, modification, or other change proposed by a coastal State to its management program within 120 days after the date the proposal is received by the Under Secretary, the proposal is deemed to be approved by the Under Secretary unless the Under Secretary has extended the period for review for purposes of meeting the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.).

"(4) APPROVAL REQUIRED FOR IMPLEMENTATION.—(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a coastal State may not implement any amendment, modification, or other change as part of its approved management program unless the amendment, modification, or other change is approved by the Under Secretary under this subsection.

"(B) The Under Secretary, after determining on a preliminary basis, that an amendment, modification, or other change which has been submitted for approval under this subsection is likely to meet the program approval standards in this section, may permit the State to expend funds awarded under this section to begin implementing the proposed amendment, modification, or change. This preliminary approval shall not extend for more than 6 months and may not be renewed. A proposed amendment, modification, or change which is subject to preliminary approval under this paragraph shall not be considered an enforceable policy for purposes of section 307(m).

"SEC. 306B. MANAGING LAND USES THAT AFFECT COASTAL WATERS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT.—Not later than 3 years after the effective date of this section, the management agency designated pursuant to section 306(d)(6) by each coastal State for which a management program has been approved pursuant to section 306 (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'coastal management agency'), shall prepare and submit to the Under Secretary a Coastal Water Quality Protection Program (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'program') for approval pursuant to this section. The purpose of the program shall be to develop and implement coastal land use management measures for nonpoint source pollution, working in close conjunction with other State and local authorities. For purposes of this section, the term "land use" shall include uses of adjacent water areas as well.

"(2) PROGRAM COORDINATION.—(A) In developing and carrying out the program, the coastal management agency shall coordinate closely with State and local water quality plans and programs developed pursuant to sections 208, 303, 319, and 320 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1288, 1313, 1329, and 1330).

"(B) The program shall serve as an update and expansion of the State nonpoint source management program developed under section 319 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as the program under that section relates to land and water uses affecting the coastal zone. The program shall be prepared in close consultation with the State authority responsible for implementation of the program prepared under section 319 of that Act, in order to assure full coordination in each participating State.

"(b) PROGRAM CONTENTS.—The Under Secretary in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall approve a program under this section if it provides for the following:

"(1) IDENTIFYING LAND USES.—The identification of, and a continuing process for identifying, land uses which, individually or cumulatively, may cause or contribute significantly to a degradation of—

"(A) those coastal waters where there is a failure to attain or maintain applicable water quality standards or protect designated uses, as determined by the State pursuant to its water quality planning processes;

"(B) those coastal waters that are threatened by reasonably foreseeable increases in pollution loadings from new or expanding sources; or

"(C) outstanding resource waters designated pursuant to paragraph (4).

"(2) IDENTIFYING CRITICAL COASTAL AREAS.—The identification of, and a continuing process for identifying, critical coastal areas within which any new land uses or substantial expansion of existing land uses will be subject to land use management measures that are determined necessary by the coastal management agency, in cooperation with the State water quality authorities and other State or local authorities, as appropriate, to protect and restore coastal water quality and designated uses.

"(3) COASTAL LAND USE MANAGEMENT MEASURES.—(A) The implementation and continuing revision from time to time of land use management measures applicable to the land uses and areas identified pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2) that the coastal management authority, working in conjunction with the State water pollution control agency and other State and local authorities, determines are necessary to achieve applicable water quality standards and protect designated uses.

"(B) Coastal land use management measures under this paragraph may include, among other measures, the use of—

"(i) buffer strips;

"(ii) setbacks;

"(iii) density restrictions;

"(iv) techniques for identifying and protecting critical coastal areas and habitats;

"(v) soil erosion and sedimentation control; and

"(vi) siting and design criteria for water uses, including marinas.

Such designations may include, but not be limited to, waters identified by the State water pollution control agency as being of special biological significance pursuant to its water quality planning processes. Outstanding resource waters may include—

"(A) areas adjacent to national or State parks or wildlife refuges;

"(B) national estuarine research reserves and national marine sanctuaries;

"(C) waters adjacent to units of the Coastal Barrier Resources System established by the Coastal Barrier Resources Act (16 U.S.C. 3501 et seq.); or

"(8) STATE COASTAL ZONE BOUNDARY MODIFICATION.—Modification of the boundaries of the State coastal zone as the coastal management agency determines is necessary to manage the land uses identified pursuant to paragraph (1) and to implement, as may be required, the recommendations made pursuant to subsection (e). If the coastal management agency does not have the authority to modify such boundaries, the program shall include recommendations for such modifications to the appropriate State authority.

"(c) PROGRAM SUBMISSION AND APPROVAL.—

"(1) PROCEDURES.—The submission and approval of a proposed program shall be governed by the procedures established by section 306(e).

"(2) ELIGIBILITY FOR AND WITHDRAWING ASSISTANCE.—If the Under Secretary finds that a coastal State has failed to submit an approvable program as required by this section, the State shall not be eligible for any funds under this section or section 603 of the Coastal Defense Initiative of 1990, and the Under Secretary shall withdraw a portion of grants otherwise available to the State under section 306 of this Act as follows:

"(A) 10 percent after 3 years after the date of the enactment of this section.

"(B) 15 percent after 4 years after the date of the enactment of this section.

The Under Secretary shall make amounts withdrawn under this paragraph available to coastal States having programs approved under this section.

"(d) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Under Secretary and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall provide technical assistance to coastal States and local governments in developing and implementing programs under this section. Such assistance shall include—

"(1) methods for assessing water quality impacts associated with coastal land uses;

"(2) methods for assessing the cumulative water quality effects of coastal development;

"(3) maintaining and from time to time revising an inventory of model ordinances, and providing other assistance to coastal States and local governments in identifying, developing, and implementing pollution control measures; and

"(4) methods to predict and assess the effects of coastal land use management measures on coastal water quality and designated uses.

"(e) INLAND BOUNDARIES.—

"(1) REVIEW.—The Under Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall, within 18 months after the date of enactment of this title, review the inland coastal zone boundary of each coastal State program which has been approved or is proposed for approval under section 306 and evaluate whether the State's coastal zone boundary extends inland to the extent necessary to control the land and water uses that have a significant impact on coastal waters of the State.

"(2) RECOMMENDATION.—If the Under Secretary finds that modifications to the inland boundaries of a State's coastal zone are necessary for that State to more effectively manage land and water uses to protect coastal waters, the Under Secretary shall recommend appropriate modifications in writing to the affected State.

"(f) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—With sums appropriated pursuant to section 318(a)(2), the Under Secretary shall provide grants to each coastal State to assist in fulfilling the requirements of this section if the coastal State matches any such grant according to a 4 to 1 ratio of Federal to State contribution. Funds available for implementing this section shall be allocated according to the regulations issued under section 306(c), except that the Under Secretary may use not more than 30 percent of any such funds to provide grants to assist those States which the Under Secretary finds are making exemplary progress in complying with the requirements of this section.

"(g) LONG ISLAND SOUND CONSERVANCY DEMONSTRATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law and within one year after the effective date of this subsection, the Under Secretary shall establish an office, to be known as the Long Island Sound Conservancy, in the immediate vicinity of Long Island Sound. The office shall provide assistance to the States of Connecticut and New York in developing and implementing the plan described in subsection (a) and in demonstrating the most effective means of coordinating the implementation of coastal zone management and water quality programs. The Conservancy shall be eligible for grants under subsection (f) without regard to the matching requirement of that subsection.

"SEC. 307. COORDINATION AND COOPERATION.

"(a) GENERAL.—In carrying out the functions and responsibilities of this title, the Under Secretary shall consult with, cooperate with, and, to the maximum extent practicable, coordinate these activities with other interested Federal agencies.

"(b) FEDERAL AGENCY CONSULTATION.—The Under Secretary shall not approve the management program submitted by a State pursuant to section 306, or any amendment, modification, or other change to the management program, unless the views of Federal agencies principally affected by such program or amendments have been adequately considered.

"(c) FEDERAL AGENCY ACTIVITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each Federal agency activity, in or outside of the coastal zone, affecting any natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone, shall be carried out in a manner which is, to the maximum extent practicable, consistent with approved State management programs.

"(2) PRESIDENTIAL EXEMPTION.—After any final judgment, decree, or order of any Federal court that is appealable under section 1291 or 1292 of title 28, United States Code, or under any other applicable provision of Federal law, that a specific Federal agency activity is not in compliance with subsection (c)(1), and certification by the Under Secretary that mediation under subsection (h) is not likely to result in such compliance, the President may, upon written request from the Under Secretary, exempt from compliance those elements of the Federal agency activity that are found by the Federal court to be inconsistent with an approved State program, if the President determines that the activity is in the paramount interest of the United States. No such exemption shall be granted due to a lack of appropriations unless the President has specifically requested such appropriations as part of the budgetary process, and the Congress has failed to make available the requested appropriations.

"(3) CONSISTENCY DETERMINATION REQUIRED.—Each Federal agency carrying out an activity subject to paragraph (1) shall provide a consistency determination to the relevant State agency designated under section 306(d)(6) at the earliest practicable time, but in no case later than 90 days before final approval of the Federal activity unless both the Federal agency and the State agency agree to a different schedule.

"(d) FEDERALLY LICENSED OR PERMITTED ACTIVITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any applicant for a required Federal license or permit to conduct an activity in or outside the coastal zone, affecting any natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone of a State, shall provide in the application to the licensing or permitting agency a certification that the proposed activity complies with the State's approved program and that the activity will be conducted in a manner consistent with the program. At the same time, the applicant shall furnish to the State or its designated agency a copy of the certification, with all necessary information and data, and with any fee which may be required pursuant to subsection (i). Each coastal State shall establish procedures for public notice in the case of all certifications and, to the extent it deems appropriate, procedures for public hearings. At the earliest practicable time, the State or its designated agency shall notify the Federal agency concerned that the State concurs with or objects to the applicant's certification. If the State or its designated agency fails to furnish the required notification within 6 months after receipt of its copy of the applicant's certification, the State's concurrence with the certification shall be conclusively presumed. No license or permit shall be granted by the Federal agency until the State or its designated agency has concurred with the applicant's certification or until, by the State's failure to act, the concurrence is conclusively presumed, unless the Under Secretary, on his or her own initiative or upon appeal by the applicant, finds, after providing a reasonable opportunity for detailed comments from the Federal agency involved and from the State, that the activity is consistent with (A) the requirements of this title, and (B) the findings and policies of this title or is otherwise necessary in the interest of national security.

"(2) OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF EXPLORATION, DEVELOPMENT, OR PRODUCTION.—Any person who submits to the Secretary of the Interior any plan for the exploration or development of, or production from, any area which has been leased under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331 et seq.) and regulations under such Act shall, with respect to any exploration, development, or production described in such plan and affecting any natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone of a State, attach to such plan a certification that each activity which is described in detail in such plan complies with such State's approved management program and will be carried out in a manner consistent with such program. No Federal official or agency shall grant such person any license or permit for any activity described in detail in such plan until such State or its designated agency receives a copy of such certification and plan, together with any other necessary data and information, and with any fee which may be required pursuant to subsection (i), and until—

"(A) the State or its designated agency, in accordance with the procedures required to be established by the State pursuant to paragraph (1), concurs with the certification and notifies the Under Secretary and the Secretary of the Interior of the concurrence;

"(B) concurrence by the State with such certification is conclusively presumed as provided for in paragraph (1). If the State fails to concur with or objects to the certification within 3 months after receipt of its copy of the certification and supporting information, the State shall provide the Under Secretary, the appropriate Federal agency, and the person with a written statement describing the status of review and the basis for further delay in issuing a final decision, and if the statement is not so provided, concurrence by such State with the certification shall be conclusively presumed; or

"(C) the Under Secretary finds, pursuant to paragraph (1), that each activity which is described in detail in such plan is consistent with (i) the requirements of this title, and (ii) the findings and policies of this title or is otherwise necessary in the interest of national security.

If a State concurs or is conclusively presumed to concur, or if the Under Secretary makes such a finding, the provisions of paragraph (1) do not apply to the person, the State, and any Federal license or permit which is required to conduct any activity affecting natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone of the State which is described in detail in the plan to which the concurrence or finding applies. If the State objects to the certification and if the Under Secretary fails to make a finding under subparagraph (C) or if the person fails substantially to comply with the plan as submitted, the person shall submit an amendment to the plan, or a new plan, to the Secretary of the Interior. With respect to any amendment or new plan submitted to the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the preceding sentence, the applicable time period for purposes of concurrence by conclusive presumption under paragraph (1) is 3 months.

"(e) FEDERAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—State and local governments submitting applications for Federal assistance under other Federal programs, for activities in or outside the coastal zone affecting any natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone, shall include the views of the agency designated pursuant to section 306(d)(6) as to the relationship of the activities to the approved management program. The applications shall be submitted and coordinated in accordance with the provisions of title IV of the Intergovernmental Coordination Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 1098). Federal agencies shall not provide assistance for any activity that is inconsistent with a coastal State's management program, unless the Under Secretary, on his or her own initiative or upon appeal by the applicant, finds, after providing a reasonable opportunity for detailed comments from the Federal agency involved and from the State, that the activity is consistent with the findings and policies of this title or is (1) the requirements of this title, and (2) otherwise necessary in the interest of national security.

"(f) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER FEDERAL LAWS.—Nothing in this title shall be construed—

"(1) to diminish either Federal or State jurisdiction, responsibility, or rights in the field of planning, development, or control of water resources, submerged lands, or navigable waters; nor to displace, supersede, limit, or modify any interstate compact or the jurisdiction or responsibility of any legally established joint or common agency of 2 or more States or of 2 or more States and the Federal Government; nor to limit the authority of the Congress to authorize and fund projects;

"(g) INCORPORATION OF AIR AND WATER STANDARDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, nothing in this title shall in any way affect any requirement (1) established by the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.) or the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7401 et seq.), or (2) established by the Federal Government or by any State or local government pursuant to such Acts. Such requirements shall be incorporated in any program developed pursuant to this title and shall be the water pollution control and air pollution control requirements applicable to such program.

"(h) MEDIATION.—In case of serious disagreement between any Federal agency and a coastal State or between 2 or more States—

"(1) in the development or the initial implementation of a management program under section 305; or

"(2) in the administration of a management program approved under section 306;

the Under Secretary shall seek to mediate the disagreement.

"(i) STATE FEE.—Each coastal State may establish, collect, and expend, without regard to any other requirement of this title, a fee to recover the reasonable costs of administering subsection (d). Such fee may recover the full costs of administration, including the reasonable costs of required research, monitoring, and enforcement.

"(j) FEDERAL FEE.—With respect to appeals under subsection (d) which are submitted after the date of the enactment of the Coastal Zone Act Reauthorization Amendments of 1990, the Under Secretary shall collect an application fee of not less than $200 for minor appeals and not less than $500 for major appeals. The Under Secretary shall collect such other fees as are necessary to recover the full costs of administering and processing such appeals under subsection (d).

"(k) WAIVING RIGHT TO APPEAL.—An applicant may waive the right to an appeal pursuant to subsection (d)(1)(B), (d)(2)(C)(i) or (e)(2) if written notification of the waiver is received by the coastal State and the Under Secretary within 60 days after the date on which the coastal State objected to the applicant's certification under that subsection.

"(l) RESTRICTION OF STATE AUTHORITY.—A coastal State may not exercise the requirements of subsection (c), (d), or (e)—

"(1) unless the coastal State's management program has been approved pursuant to section 306; or

"(2) if approval of the coastal State's management program has been withdrawn pursuant to section 312(d).

"(m) CONSISTENCY WITH ENFORCEABLE POLICIES REQUIRED.—In complying with the provisions of subsections (c), (d), and (e), activities of Federal agencies and applicants shall be carried out consistent with the enforceable policies of the State management program. Federal agencies shall give adequate consideration to program provisions which are in the nature of recommendations.

"SEC. 308. COASTAL ENERGY IMPACT PROGRAM.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than January 1, 1993, the Under Secretary shall recommend to the Congress a coastal energy impact program. These recommendations shall include provision of financial and technical assistance to meet the needs of coastal States and local governments resulting from energy facilities and related activities affecting natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone. The program shall identify the major energy activities which are affecting natural resources, land uses, or water uses in the coastal zone and the major obstacles, if any, to effective management of such activities under this title.

"(b) OUTER CONTINENTAL SHELF STATE PARTICIPATION.—

The grants shall be used to assist the State in carrying out its responsibilities under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act.

"(c) LOAN REPAYMENT OBLIGATIONS UNAFFECTED.—The obligations of any coastal State or unit of general purpose local government to repay loans made pursuant to section 308(d)(1) of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 1456a(d)(1)), as in effect before the date of the enactment of the Coastal Zone Act Reauthorization Amendments of 1990, and any repayment schedule established pursuant to that Act, are not altered by any provision of this title. Such loans shall be repaid under authority of this subsection and the Under Secretary may issue regulations governing such repayment. If the Under Secretary finds that any coastal State or unit of local government is unable to meet its obligations pursuant to this subsection because the actual increases in employment and related population resulting from coastal energy activity and the facilities associated with such activity do not provide adequate revenues to enable such State or unit to meet such obligations in accordance with the appropriate repayment schedule, the Under Secretary shall, after review of the information submitted by such State or unit take any of the following actions:

"(1) Modify the terms and conditions of such loan.

"(2) Refinance the loan.

"(3) Recommend to the Congress that legislation be enacted to forgive the loan.

This program shall encourage and monitor improvements in one or more of the following special national interest areas:

"(1) COASTAL WETLANDS MANAGEMENT AND PROTECTION.—Coastal wetlands management and protection, consistent with the interim goal to achieve no overall net loss of the Nation's remaining wetlands base, including adoption of—

"(A) reduce the threat to life and the destruction of property by discouraging development and redevelopment in high hazard areas;

"(B) properly manage development and redevelopment in other hazard areas including such mechanisms as setbacks, requirements that buildings be suitable for relocation and other special building code standards, and acquisition and relocation programs; and

"(C) anticipate and manage the effects of potential sea level or Great Lakes level rise and land subsidence by—

"(i) requiring consideration of sea level or Great Lakes level rise and land subsidence in the siting of new public infrastructure investments and new large-scale developments with long life expectancies, such as sewage treatment plants, industrial plants, and hazardous waste facilities;

"(ii) establishing and protecting buffer zones for wetlands which are likely to migrate landward in response to sea level or Great Lakes level rise;

"(3) WAIVER.—The Under Secretary may waive the requirements of this section only by finding that a lack of satisfactory progress by a State is due to factors which are beyond the control of the State and which were unforeseen at the time the plan was negotiated. The Under Secretary shall notify the Congress and the public before granting any waiver under this subsection.

"(f) FUNDING.—Beginning in fiscal year 1991, at least 10 percent, but not more than 20 percent, of the amounts appropriated under section 318(a)(1) to implement sections 306 and 306A shall be used by the Under Secretary to implement this section.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Beaches Environmental Assessment, Closure, and Health Act of 1990".

SEC. 7302. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the Nation's beaches are a valuable public resource used for recreation by millions of people annually;

(2) the beaches of coastal States are hosts to many out-of-State and international visitors;

(3) tourism in the coastal zone generates billions of dollars annually;

(4) as of the year 2000, as much as 80 percent of the Nation's population may be living within 50 miles of the coast;

(5) increased population has contributed to the decline in the environmental quality of coastal waters;

(6) pollution in coastal waters is not restricted by State and other political boundaries;

(7) each coastal State has its own method of testing the quality of its coastal recreation waters, providing varying degrees of protection to the public; and

(8) the adoption of standards by coastal States for monitoring the quality of coastal recreation waters, and the posting of signs at beaches notifying the public during periods when the standards are exceeded, would enhance public health and safety.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this subtitle is to require uniform procedures for beach testing and monitoring to protect public safety and improve the environmental quality of coastal recreation waters.

SEC. 7303. WATER QUALITY CRITERIA FOR COASTAL RECREATION WATERS.

Section 304(a) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1314(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(9) COASTAL RECREATION WATERS.—(A) The Administrator, after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies and other interested persons, shall review and revise within 1 year after the effective date of this paragraph (and from time to time thereafter) water quality criteria for coastal recreation waters. The criteria shall be based on a national goal of eliminating human health risks posed from pathogens in those waters, and until that goal is met shall ensure the protection of public health. The criteria shall include specific numeric criteria calculated to reflect public health risks from short-term increases in pathogens in coastal recreation waters resulting from rainfall, malfunctions of wastewater treatment works, and other causes.

"(B) Not later than 9 months after the date on which the Administrator publishes revised water quality criteria for coastal recreation waters under subparagraph (A), the Administrator shall publish regulations specifying methods to be used by States to test coastal recreation waters, during periods of use by the public, for compliance with standards adopted or effective under section 303(i). The regulations shall include—

"(i) requirements for the frequency of testing based on whether particular waters subject to testing are used frequently, moderately, or occasionally;

"(ii) methods for detecting short-term increases in pathogens in coastal recreation waters resulting from rainfall, malfunctions of wastewater treatment works, and other causes; and

"(iii) requirements for testing based on proximity of particular waters to pollution sources.

"(C) Not later than 9 months after the date on which the Administrator publishes revised water quality criteria for coastal recreation waters under subparagraph (A), the Administrator shall publish regulations that require States to post signs on beaches adjoining coastal recreation waters during periods when those waters do not comply with applicable water quality standards, which notify the public of that noncompliance and potential risks. A State may delegate responsibility for posting of coastal recreation waters to local government authorities.

"(D) The Administrator, after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies, shall develop and publish within 1 year after the effective date of this paragraph guidance on uniform assessment and monitoring procedures for floatable materials in coastal recreation waters.

"(E) For purposes of this paragraph—

"(2) FAILURE OF STATE TO ADOPT WATER QUALITY STANDARDS.—If a State fails to adopt water quality standards in accordance with paragraph (1), the criteria published by the Administrator under section 304(a)(9) shall take effect as water quality standards for coastal recreation waters of the State until such time as the State adopts its own water quality standards.

"(3) COASTAL RECREATION WATERS DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'coastal recreation waters' has the meaning that term has in section 304(a)(9).".

For purposes of this subsection, financing an eligible airport-related project includes making payments for debt service on bonds and other indebtedness incurred to carry out such project.

"(2) USE OF REVENUES AND RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN FEES AND REVENUES.—The Secretary may grant a public agency which controls a commercial service airport authority to impose a fee under this subsection to finance specific projects only if the Secretary finds, on the basis of an application submitted for such authority—

"(A) that the amount and duration of the proposed fee will result in revenues (including interest and other returns on such revenues) which do not exceed amounts necessary to finance the specific projects; and

"(B) that each of the specific projects is an eligible airport-related project which will—

"(i) preserve or enhance capacity, safety, or security of the national air transportation system,

"(ii) reduce noise resulting from an airport which is part of such system, or

"(iii) furnish opportunities for enhanced competition between or among air carriers.

"(3) LIMITATION REGARDING PASSENGERS OF AIR CARRIERS RECEIVING ESSENTIAL AIR SERVICE COMPENSATION.—If a passenger of an air carrier is being provided air service to an eligible point under section 419 for which compensation is being paid under such section, a public agency which controls any other airport may not impose a fee pursuant to this subsection for enplanement of such passenger with respect to such air service.

"(4) LIMITATION REGARDING OBLIGATIONS.—No fee may be imposed pursuant to this subsection for a project which is not approved by the Secretary under this subsection on or before September 30, 1992—

"(A) if, during fiscal years 1991 and 1992, the amount available for obligation, in the aggregate, under section 505 of Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 is less than $3,700,000,000; or

"(ii) if, during fiscal year 1992, the amount available for obligation, in the aggregate, under section 419 is less than $38,600,000.

"(5) TWO ENPLANEMENTS PER TRIP LIMITATION.—Enplaned passengers on whom a fee may be imposed by a public agency pursuant to this subsection include passengers of air carriers originating or connecting at the commercial service airport which the agency controls. A fee may not be collected pursuant to this subsection from a passenger with respect to any enplanement of such passenger, on a one-way trip and on a trip in each direction of a round trip, after the second enplanement for which a fee has been collected pursuant to this subsection from such passenger.

"(6) TREATMENT OF REVENUES.—Revenues derived from collection of a fee by a public agency pursuant to this subsection shall not be treated as airport revenues for the purposes of any contract between such agency and an air carrier.

"(7) EXCLUSIVITY OF AUTHORITY.—No State or political subdivision or agency thereof which is not a public agency controlling a commercial service airport shall prohibit, limit, or regulate the imposition of fees by the public agency pursuant to this subsection, collection of such fees, or use of revenues derived therefrom. No contract between an air carrier and a public agency which controls a commercial service airport entered into before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this subsection shall affect the authority of the public agency to impose fees pursuant to this subsection and to use the revenues derived from such fees in accordance with this subsection.

"(8) NONEXCLUSIVITY OF CONTRACTUAL AGREEMENTS.—No project carried out through the use of a fee collected pursuant to this subsection may be subject to an exclusive long-term lease or use agreement of an air carrier, as defined by the Secretary by regulation. Any lease or use agreement of an air carrier with respect to a facility constructed or expanded through the use of such fee may not contain or be subject to any term or condition which restricts the public agency which controls the airport from funding, developing, or assigning new capacity at the airport.

"(9) COLLECTION AND HANDLING OF FEES BY AIR CARRIERS.—The regulations issued by the Secretary to carry out this subsection shall—

"(A) require air carriers and their agents to collect fees imposed by public agencies pursuant to this subsection;

"(B) establish procedures regarding handling and remittance of the amounts so collected;

"(C) ensure that such amounts are promptly paid to the public agency for which they are collected less a uniform amount determined by the Secretary as reflecting average necessary and reasonable expenses (net of interest accruing to the air carrier and agent after collection and prior to remittance) incurred in the collection and handling of such fees; and

"(D) require that the amount of fees collected pursuant to this subsection with respect to any air transportation be noted on the ticket for such air transportation.

"(10) APPLICATION PROCESS.—

"(A) SUBMISSION.—A public agency which controls a commercial service airport and is interested in imposing a fee pursuant to this subsection shall submit to the Secretary an application for authority to impose such fee.

"(B) CONTENT.—An application submitted under this paragraph shall contain such information and be in such form as the Secretary may require by regulation.

"(C) OPPORTUNITY FOR CONSULTATION.—Before submission of an application under this paragraph, the public agency must provide reasonable notice to, and an opportunity for consultation with, air carriers operating at the airport.

"(D) NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY FOR COMMENT.—After receiving an application under this paragraph, the Secretary shall provide notice and an opportunity for comment by air carriers and other interested persons concerning such application.

"(E) APPROVAL.—A fee may only be imposed pursuant to this subsection if the Secretary approves an application granting authority for the imposition of such fee. Not later than 120 days after the date of receipt of such an application, the Secretary shall make a final decision regarding approval of such application.

"(11) RECORDKEEPING AND AUDITS.—

"(A) WITH RESPECT TO COLLECTION OF FEES.—The Secretary shall issue regulations requiring such recordkeeping and auditing of accounts maintained by an air carrier and any agency thereof which is collecting a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection and by the public agency which is imposing such fee as may be necessary to ensure compliance with this subsection.

"(B) WITH RESPECT TO USE OF REVENUES.—The Secretary shall periodically audit and review the use by a public agency which controls an airport of revenues derived from a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection. Upon such review and after a public hearing, the Secretary may terminate the authority of such agency to impose such fee, in whole or in part, to the extent the Secretary determines that revenues derived therefrom are not being used in accordance with this subsection.

"(C) SET-OFF.—If the Secretary determines that a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection is excessive or that the revenues derived from such fee are not being used in accordance with this subsection, the Secretary may set off such amounts as may be necessary to ensure compliance with this subsection against amounts otherwise payable to the public agency under the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982.

"(12) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Authority granted to impose a fee pursuant to this subsection shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may establish to carry out the objectives of this subsection.

"(13) ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection. Such regulations may prescribe the time and form by which a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection shall take effect.

"(2) ACQUISITIONS OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.—The Administrator may, under subsection (a) construct or acquire by purchase, condemnation, or lease a public building, or interest in a public building (as defined in section 13 of the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 612)) only under a delegation of authority from the Administrator of General Services.

"(c) PROCUREMENT PROCEDURES.—In procuring personal property or services and real property and interests therein under subsection (a), the Administrator may use procedures other than competitive procedures in circumstances which are set forth in section 303(c) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253(c)).

"(e) MULTIYEAR SERVICE CONTRACTS.—

"(C) specialized training necessitating high quality instructor skills (for example, pilot and aircrew members; foreign language training); and

"(D) base services (for example, ground maintenance, in-plane refueling; bus transportation; refuse collection and disposal).

"(2) FINDINGS.—The Administrator may enter into a contract described in paragraph (1) only if the Administrator finds that—

"(A) there will be a continuing 'requirement for the services consonant with current plans for the proposed contract period;

"(B) the furnishing of such services will require a substantial initial investment in plant or equipment, or the incurrence of substantial contingent liabilities for the assembly, training, or transportation of a specialized workforce; and

"(C) the use of such a contract will promote the best interests of the United States by encouraging effective competition and promoting economies in operation.

"(3) GUIDANCE PRINCIPLES.—In entering into contracts described in paragraph (1), the Administrator shall be guided by the following principles:

"(A) The portion of the cost of any plant or equipment amortized as a cost of contract performance should not exceed the ratio between the period of contract performance and the anticipated useful commercial life of such plant or equipment. Useful commercial life, for this purpose, means the commercial utility of the facilities rather than the physical life thereof, the due consideration given to such factors as location of facilities, specialized nature thereof, and obsolescence.

"(B) Consideration shall be given to the desirability of obtaining an option to renew the contract for a reasonable period not to exceed 3 years, at prices not to include charges for plant, equipment, and other nonrecurring costs, already amortized.

"(C) Consideration shall be given to the desirability of reserving in the Federal Aviation Administration the right, upon payment of the unamortized portion of the cost of the plant or equipment, to take title thereto under appropriate circumstances.

"(4) TERMINATION.—In the event funds are not made available for the continuation of a contract described in paragraph (1) into a subsequent fiscal year, the contract shall be canceled or terminated, and the costs of cancellation or termination may be paid from—

"(A) that the use of such a contract will promote the safety or efficiency of the National Airspace System and will result in reduced total costs under the contract;

"(B) that the minimum need for the property to be purchased is expected to remain substantially unchanged during the contemplated contract period in terms of production rate, procurement rate, and total quantities;

"(C) that there is a reasonable expectation that throughout the contemplated contract period the Administrator will request funding for the contract at the level required to avoid contract cancellation;

"(D) that there is a stable design for the property to be acquired and that the technical risks associated with such property are not excessive; and

"(E) that the estimates of both the cost of the contract and the anticipated cost avoidance through the use of a multiyear contract are realistic.

"(2) REGULATIONS.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—The Administrator shall issue regulations for acquisition of property under this subsection to promote the use of multiyear contracting as authorized by paragraph (1) in a manner that will allow the most efficient use of multiyear contracting.

"(B) CANCELLATION PROVISIONS.—The regulations issued under this paragraph may provide for cancellation provisions in multiyear contracts described in paragraph (1) to the extent that such provisions are necessary and in the best interests of the United States. Such cancellation provisions may include consideration of both recurring and nonrecurring costs of the contractor associated with the production of the items to be delivered under the contract.

"(C) BROADENING INDUSTRIAL BASE.—In order to broaden the aviation industrial base, the regulations issued under this paragraph shall provide that, to the extent practicable—

"(i) multiyear contracting under paragraph (1) shall be used in such a manner as to seek, retain, and promote the use under such contracts of companies that are subcontractors, vendors, or suppliers; and

"(ii) upon accrual of any payment or other benefit under such a multiyear contract to any subcontract, vendor, or supplier company participating in such contractor, such payment or benefit shall be delivered to such company in the most expeditious manner practicable.

"(D) PROTECTION OF FEDERAL INTERESTS.—The regulations issued under this paragraph shall also provide that, to the extent practicable, the administration of this subsection, and of the regulations issued under this subsection, shall not be carried out in a manner to preclude or curtail the existing ability of the Federal Aviation Administration to—

"(i) provide for competition in the production of items to be delivered under such a contract; or

"(ii) provide for termination of a prime contract the performance of which is deficient with respect to cost, quality, or schedule.

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR CONTRACTS WITH HIGH CANCELLATION CEILING.—Before any contract described in paragraph (1) that contains a clause setting forth a cancellation ceiling in excess of $100,000,000 may be awarded, the Administrator shall give written notification of the proposed contract and of the proposed cancellation ceiling for that contract to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Public Works and Transportation of the House of Representatives, and such contract may not then be awarded until the end of a period of 30 days beginning on the date of such notification.

"(4) ADVANCE PROCUREMENT.—Contracts made under this subsection may be used for the advance procurement of components, parts, and materials necessary to the manufacture of equipment to be used in the National Airspace System, and contracts may be made under this subsection for such advance procurement, if feasible and practicable, in order to achieve economic-lot purchases and more efficient production rates.

"(5) TERMINATION.—In the event funds are not made available for the continuation of a contract made under this subsection into a subsequent fiscal year, the contract shall be canceled or terminated, and the costs of cancellation or termination may be paid from—

"(A) appropriations originally available for the performance of the contract concerned;

"(7) MULTIYEAR CONTRACT DEFINED.—For the purposes of this subsection, a multiyear contract is a contract for the purchase of property or services for more than 1, but not more than 5, fiscal years. Such a contract may provide that performance under the contract during the second and subsequent years of the contract is contingent upon the appropriation of funds and (if it does so provide) may provide for a cancellation payment to be made to the contractor if such appropriations are not made.

"(8) PRICE OPTIONS.—The Administrator may incorporate into a proposed multiyear contract negotiated priced options for varying the quantities of end items to be procured over the period of the contract.".

Subtitle E—Off Budget Treatment of Transportation Trust Funds

SEC. 9401. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Transportation Trust Funds Off Budget Act of 1990".

SEC. 9402. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) social and economic security are the cornerstones of a stronger and more productive United States;

(2) the Highway Trust Fund and the Airport and Airway Trust Fund are self-supporting as amounts in such funds are derived through fees paid by users of the Nation's transportation systems;

(3) on-budget treatment of the Highway Trust Fund and the Airport and Airway Trust Fund—

(A) deceives the public by using surpluses in such funds to understate the real budget deficit;

(B) undermines the integrity of the budget process by understating shortfalls in general revenues;

(C) damages needed highway, transit, and aviation programs; and

(D) fosters inefficiency and waste as limitations force down obligations from such funds; and

(4) failure to provide off-budget treatment for the Highway Trust Fund and the Airport and Airway Trust Fund impairs the Nation's economic productivity and growth and ignores the Nation's infrastructure needs.

SEC. 9403. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Section 9404 of this Act (including the amendments made by such section) shall take effect on October 1, 1995.

SEC. 9404. BUDGETARY TREATMENT OF HIGHWAY TRUST FUND, AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND, INLAND WATERWAYS TRUST FUND, AND HARBOR MAINTENANCE TRUST FUND.

(a) TREATMENT OF TRUST FUND OPERATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The receipts and disbursements of the Highway Trust Fund, the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, the Inland Waterways Trust Fund, and the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund allocable to the transportation-related operations of each such Trust Fund—ceipts allocable to such disbursements, under paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 9505(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to the expenditures from the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund for operation and maintenance of harbors and inland harbors and for payments of rebates of certain tolls and charges).

(b) ADJUSTMENTS OF AUTHORIZATIONS AND APPROPRIATIONS OUT OF TRUST FUND.—The Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (49 U.S.C. App. 2201-2227) is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 536. ADJUSTMENTS OF AUTHORIZATIONS AND APPORTIONMENTS.

"(a) ESTIMATES OF UNFUNDED AVIATION AUTHORIZATIONS AND NET AVIATION RECEIPTS.—Not later than March 31 of each year, the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, shall estimate—

"(2) APPORTIONMENT.—The Secretary shall apportion amounts made available for apportionment by reason of paragraph (1).

"(3) PERIOD OF AVAILABILITY.—Any funds apportioned pursuant to paragraph (2) shall remain available for the period for which they would be available if such apportionment took effect with the fiscal year in which they are apportioned pursuant to paragraph (2).

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) UNFUNDED AVIATION AUTHORIZATIONS.—The term 'unfunded aviation authorization' means, at any time, the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the total amount authorized to be appropriated or available for obligation from the Trust Fund which has not been appropriated or obligated, over

"(B) the amount available in the Trust Fund at such time to make such appropriation or to liquidate such obligations (after all other unliquidated obligations at such time which are payable from the Trust Fund have been liquidated).

(2) TREATMENT OF TRUST FUND RECEIPTS FOR DEFICIT CALCULATION PURPOSES.—Section 3(6) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by adding after the second sentence the following new sentences: "In calculating the deficit for purposes of comparison with the maximum deficit amount under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 and in calculating the excess deficit for purposes of sections 251 and 252 of such Act of 1985 for any fiscal year, the receipts of the Highway Trust Fund (including the Mass Transit Account), the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, the Inland Waterways Trust Fund, and the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund allocable to the transportation-related operations of each such Trust Fund for such fiscal year shall not be included in total revenues for such fiscal year, and the disbursements allocable to the transportation-related operations of each such Trust Fund for such fiscal year shall not be included in total budget outlays for such fiscal year. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the receipts and disbursements allocable to the transportation-related operations of such Trust Funds are the disbursements, and the receipts allocable to such disbursements, described in section 9404(a)(2) of the Transportation Trust Funds Off Budget Act of 1990 and paragraph (1) of section 9502(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to expenditures from the Airport and Airway Trust Fund for the airport and airway program).".

(3) LIMITATIONS ON CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET PROCESS.—Section 310 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h) LIMITATION ON CHANGES TO THE HIGHWAY TRUST FUND AND THE AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, it shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to consider—

"(1) any concurrent resolution on the budget for any fiscal year, or any amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that assumes or contains in the aggregate totals or functional categories provided for by section 301(a) any amount of transportation-related budget authority or transportation-related budget outlays from the Highway Trust Fund, the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, the Inland Waterways Trust Fund, or the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund;

"(2) any concurrent resolution on the budget for any fiscal year, or any amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that contains reconciliation instructions with respect to transportation-related operations of the Highway Trust Fund, the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, the Inland Waterways Trust Fund, or the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund, or

SEC. 9405. SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT TRANSPORTATION TAXES SHOULD BE DEDICATED TO THE TRANSPORTATION TRUST FUNDS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) highway motor fuel taxes and aviation user taxes have in the past been dedicated to the Highway and Airport and Airway Trust Funds and have consequently been used exclusively for the development of the surface transportation and aviation systems;

(2) extraordinary budget pressures have led to consideration of the need for temporary, 5-year highway motor fuels taxes and aviation user taxes for deficit reduction in order to help resolve the budget crisis; and

(3) if any portion of these taxes is used for deficit reduction, this use should be temporary so that we can return as soon as possible to the dedicated user fee principle in order to ensure fairness to the highway and aviation users and to ensure that needed infrastructure improvements are made.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) Congress reaffirms the principle that all highway motor fuel taxes and aviation user taxes should be deposited in the Highway and Airport and Airway Trust Funds, respectively, and all amounts in these Trust Funds should be made available for obligation for surface transportation and aviation programs, respectively, and not for deficit reduction; and

(2) in the event that any portion of these taxes is used for deficit reduction during the 5-year period beginning with fiscal year 1991, the Congress should return to the dedicated user fee principle as soon as possible but no later than the end of fiscal year 1995.

The survey shall also identify the capital development needs of such airports in order to make them part of the national air transportation system and shall identify which capital development needs are eligible for grants under section 505. The survey shall be completed by September 30, 1991.

For purposes of this subsection, financing an eligible airport-related project includes making payments for debt service on bonds and other indebtedness incurred to carry out such project.

"(2) USE OF REVENUES AND RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN FEES AND REVENUES.—The Secretary may grant a public agency which controls a commercial service airport authority to impose a fee under this subsection to finance specific projects only if the Secretary finds, on the basis of an application submitted for such authority—

"(A) that the amount and duration of the proposed fee will result in revenues (including interest and other returns on such revenues) which do not exceed amounts necessary to finance the specific projects; and

"(B) that each of the specific projects is an eligible airport-related project which will—

"(i) preserve or enhance capacity, safety, or security of the national air transportation system,

"(ii) reduce noise resulting from an airport which is part of such system, or

"(iii) furnish opportunities for enhanced competition between or among air carriers.

"(3) LIMITATION REGARDING PASSENGERS OF AIR CARRIERS RECEIVING ESSENTIAL AIR SERVICE COMPENSATION.—If a passenger of an air carrier is being provided air service to an eligible point under section 419 for which compensation is being paid under such section, a public agency which controls any other airport may not impose a fee pursuant to this subsection for enplanement of such passenger with respect to such air service.

"(4) LIMITATION REGARDING OBLIGATIONS.—No fee may be imposed pursuant to this subsection for a project which is not approved by the Secretary under this subsection on or before September 30, 1992—

"(A) if, during fiscal years 1991 and 1992, the amount available for obligation, in the aggregate, under section 505 of Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 is less than $3,700,000,000; or

"(B)(i) if, during fiscal year 1991, the amount available for obligation, in the aggregate, under section 419 is less than $26,600,000; or

"(ii) if, during fiscal year 1992, the amount available for obligation, in the aggregate, under section 419 is less than $38,600,000.

"(5) TWO ENPLANEMENTS PER TRIP LIMITATION.—Enplaned passengers on whom a fee may be imposed by a public agency pursuant to this subsection include passengers of air carriers originating or connecting at the commercial service airport which the agency controls. A fee may not be collected pursuant to this subsection from a passenger with respect to any enplanement of such passenger, on a one-way trip and on a trip in each direction of a round trip, after the second enplanement for which a fee has been collected pursuant to this subsection from such passenger.

"(6) TREATMENT OF REVENUES.—Revenues derived from collection of a fee by a public agency pursuant to this subsection shall not be treated as airport revenues for the purposes of any contract between such agency and an air carrier.

"(7) EXCLUSIVITY OF AUTHORITY.—No State or political subdivision or agency thereof which is not a public agency controlling a commercial service airport shall prohibit, limit, or regulate the imposition of fees by the public agency pursuant to this subsection, collection of such fees, or use of revenues derived therefrom. No contract between an air carrier and a public agency which controls a commercial service airport entered into before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this subsection shall affect the authority of the public agency to impose fees pursuant to this subsection and to use the revenues derived from such fees in accordance with this subsection.

"(8) NONEXCLUSIVITY OF CONTRACTUAL AGREEMENTS.—No project carried out through the use of a fee collected pursuant to this subsection may be subject to an exclusive long-term lease or use agreement of an air carrier, as defined by the Secretary by regulation. Any lease or use agreement of an air carrier with respect to a facility constructed or expanded through the use of such fee may not contain or be subject to any term or condition which restricts the public agency which controls the airport from funding, developing, or assigning new capacity at the airport.

"(9) COLLECTION AND HANDLING OF FEES BY AIR CARRIERS.—The regulations issued by the Secretary to carry out this subsection shall—

"(A) require air carriers and their agents to collect fees imposed by public agencies pursuant to this subsection;

"(B) establish procedures regarding handling and remittance of the amounts so collected;

"(C) ensure that such amounts are promptly paid to the public agency for which they are collected less a uniform amount determined by the Secretary as reflecting average necessary and reasonable expenses (net of interest accruing to the air carrier and agent after collection and prior to remittance) incurred in the collection and handling of such fees; and

"(D) require that the amount of fees collected pursuant to this subsection with respect to any air transportation be noted on the ticket for such air transportation.

"(10) APPLICATION PROCESS.—

"(A) SUBMISSION.—A public agency which controls a commercial service airport and is interested in imposing a fee pursuant to this subsection shall submit to the Secretary an application for authority to impose such fee.

"(B) CONTENT.—An application submitted under this paragraph shall contain such information and be in such form as the Secretary may require by regulation.

"(C) OPPORTUNITY FOR CONSULTATION.—Before submission of an application under this paragraph, the public agency must provide reasonable notice to, and an opportunity for consultation with, air carriers operating at the airport.

"(D) NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY FOR COMMENT.—After receiving an application under this paragraph, the Secretary shall provide notice and an opportunity for comment by air carriers and other interested persons concerning such application.

"(E) APPROVAL.—A fee may only be imposed pursuant to this subsection if the Secretary approves an application granting authority for the imposition of such fee. Not later than 120 days after the date of receipt of such an application, the Secretary shall make a final decision regarding approval of such application.

"(11) RECORDKEEPING AND AUDITS.—

"(A) WITH RESPECT TO COLLECTION OF FEES.—The Secretary shall issue regulations requiring such recordkeeping and auditing of accounts maintained by an air carrier and any agency thereof which is collecting a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection and by the public agency which is imposing such fee as may be necessary to ensure compliance with this subsection.

"(B) WITH RESPECT TO USE OF REVENUES.—The Secretary shall periodically audit and review the use by a public agency which controls an airport of revenues derived from a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection. Upon such review and after a public hearing, the Secretary may terminate the authority of such agency to impose such fee, in whole or in part, to the extent the Secretary determines that revenues derived therefrom are not being used in accordance with this subsection.

"(C) SET-OFF.—If the Secretary determines that a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection is excessive or that the revenues derived from such fee are not being used in accordance with this subsection, the Secretary may set off such amounts as may be necessary to ensure compliance with this subsection against amounts otherwise payable to the public agency under the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982.

"(12) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Authority granted to impose a fee pursuant to this subsection shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may establish to carry out the objectives of this subsection.

"(13) ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection. Such regulations may prescribe the time and form by which a fee imposed pursuant to this subsection shall take effect.

"(D) base services (for example, ground maintenance, in-plane refueling; bus transportation; refuse collection and disposal).

"(3) GUIDANCE PRINCIPLES.—In entering into contracts described in paragraph (1), the Administrator shall be guided by the following principles:

"(A) The portion of the cost of any plant or equipment amortized as a cost of contract performance should not exceed the ratio between the period of contract performance and the anticipated useful commercial life of such plant or equipment. Useful commercial life, for this purpose, means the commercial utility of the facilities rather than the physical life thereof, the due consideration given to such factors as location of facilities, specialized nature thereof, and obsolescence.

"(B) Consideration shall be given to the desirability of obtaining an option to renew the contract for a reasonable period not to exceed 3 years, at prices not to include charges for plant, equipment, and other nonrecurring costs, already amortized.

"(A) that the use of such a contract will promote the safety or efficiency of the National Airspace System and will result in reduced total costs under the contract;

"(B) that the minimum need for the property to be purchased is expected to remain substantially unchanged during the contemplated contract period in terms of production rate, procurement rate, and total quantities;

"(C) that there is a reasonable expectation that throughout the contemplated contract period the Administrator will request funding for the contract at the level required to avoid contract cancellation;

"(D) that there is a stable design for the property to be acquired and that the technical risks associated with such property are not excessive; and

"(E) that the estimates of both the cost of the contract and the anticipated cost avoidance through the use of a multiyear contract are realistic.

"(2) REGULATIONS.—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—The Administrator shall issue regulations for acquisition of property under this subsection to promote the use of multiyear contracting as authorized by paragraph (1) in a manner that will allow the most efficient use of multiyear contracting.

"(B) CANCELLATION PROVISIONS.—The regulations issued under this paragraph may provide for cancellation provisions in multiyear contracts described in paragraph (1) to the extent that such provisions are necessary and in the best interests of the United States. Such cancellation provisions may include consideration of both recurring and nonrecurring costs of the contractor associated with the production of the items to be delivered under the contract.

"(C) BROADENING INDUSTRIAL BASE.—In order to broaden the aviation industrial base, the regulations issued under this paragraph shall provide that, to the extent practicable—

"(ii) upon accrual of any payment or other benefit under such a multiyear contract to any subcontract, vendor, or supplier company participating in such contractor, such payment or benefit shall be delivered to such company in the most expeditious manner practicable.

"(D) PROTECTION OF FEDERAL INTERESTS.—The regulations issued under this paragraph shall also provide that, to the extent practicable, the administration of this subsection, and of the regulations issued under this subsection, shall not be carried out in a manner to preclude or curtail the existing ability of the Federal Aviation Administration to—

"(d) INCREASE IN TAX FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH REPLACEMENT PLAN OR INCREASE BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting '50 percent' for '20 percent' with respect to any employer reversion from a qualified plan unless—

"(A) the employer establishes or maintains a qualified replacement plan, or

"(B) the plan provides benefit increases meeting the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PLAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified replacement plan' means a qualified plan established or maintained by the employer in connection with a qualified plan termination (hereinafter referred to as the 'replacement plan') with respect to which the following requirements are met:

"(A) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Substantially all of the active participants in the terminated plan who remain as employees of the employer after the termination are active participants in the replacement plan.

"(B) ASSET TRANSFER REQUIREMENT.—

"(i) 30 PERCENT CUSHION.—A direct transfer from the terminated plan to the replacement plan is made before any employer reversion, and the transfer is in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(I) 30 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, over

"(II) the amount determined under clause (ii).

"(ii) REDUCTION FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS.—The amount determined under this clause is an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits under the terminated plan of any participants (including nonactive participants) pursuant to a plan amendment which—

"(I) is adopted during the 60-day period ending on the date of termination of the qualified plan, and

"(II) takes effect immediately on the termination date.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—In the case of the transfer of any amount under clause (i)—

"(I) such amount shall not be includible in the gross income of the employer,

"(II) no deduction shall be allowable with respect to such transfer, and

"(III) such transfer shall not be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of this section.

"(C) ALLOCATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any defined contribution plan, the portion of the amount transferred to the replacement plan under subparagraph (B)(i) is—

"(I) allocated under the plan to the accounts of participants in the plan year in which the transfer occurs, or

"(II) credited to a suspense account and allocated from such account to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the 7-plan-year period beginning with the year of the transfer.

"(ii) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 415 LIMITATION.—If, by reason of any limitation under section 415, any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) may not be allocated to a participant before the close of the 7-year period under such clause—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants by reason of any such limitation, shall be allocated to the participant as provided in section 415.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF INCOME.—Any income on any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) shall be allocated to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the remainder of the period determined under such clause (after application of clause (ii)).

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of participants as of such date, except that any amount which may not be allocated by reason of any limitation under section 415 shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants under subclause (I) by reason of such limitation, such portion shall be treated as an employer reversion to which this section applies.

"(3) PRO RATA BENEFIT INCREASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if a plan amendment to the terminated plan is adopted in connection with the termination of the plan which provides pro rata increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of all participants (including nonactive participants) which—

"(i) have an aggregate present value not less than 25 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, and

"(ii) take effect immediately on the termination date.

"(B) PRO RATA INCREASE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a pro rata increase is an increase in the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of each participant (including nonactive participants) in an amount which bears the same ratio to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) as—

"(i) the present value of such participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit (determined without regard to this subsection), bears to

"(ii) the aggregate present value of nonforfeitable accrued benefits of the terminated plan (as so determined).

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of nonactive participants shall not exceed 40 percent of the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) by substituting 'equal to' for 'not less than'.

"(4) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(A) LIMITATIONS.—A benefit may not be increased under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), and an amount may not be allocated to a participant under paragraph (2)(C), if such increase or allocation would result in a failure to meet any requirement under section 401(a)(4) or 415.

"(B) TREATMENT AS EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS.—Any increase in benefits under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), or any allocation of any amount (or income allocable thereto) to any account under paragraph (2)(C), shall be treated as an annual benefit or annual addition for purposes of section 415.

"(C) 10-YEAR PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Except as provided by the Secretary, section 415(b)(5)(D) shall not apply to any increase in benefits by reason of this subsection to the extent that the application of this subparagraph does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (as defined in section 414(q)).

"(1) a trust which is part of such plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of subsection (a) or (h) of section 401 solely by reason of such transfer (or any other action authorized under this section),

"(2) no amount shall be includible in the gross income of the employer maintaining the plan solely by reason of such transfer,

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (c), a transfer shall be treated as a qualified transfer if such transfer—

"(i) is made after the close of the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, and before the earlier of—

"(I) the due date (including extensions) for the filing of the return of tax for such preceding taxable year, or

"(II) the date such return is filed, and

"(ii) does not exceed the expenditures of the employer for qualified current retiree health liabilities for such preceding taxable year.

"(B) REDUCTION IN DEDUCTION.—The amount of the deductions otherwise allowable under this chapter to an employer for the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, shall be reduced by the amount of any qualified transfer to which this paragraph applies.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—In the case of a qualified transfer described in subsection (b)(4), the requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to any participant who separated from service during the taxable year to which such transfer relates by recomputing such participant's benefits as if subparagraph (A) had applied immediately before such separation.

"(3) MINIMUM COST REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if each group health plan or arrangement under which applicable health benefits are provided provides that the applicable employer cost for each taxable year during the benefit maintenance period shall not be less than the higher of the applicable employer costs for each of the 2 taxable years immediately preceding the taxable year of the qualified transfer.

"(ii) the number of individuals to whom coverage for applicable health benefits was provided during such taxable year.

"(C) ELECTION TO COMPUTE COST SEPARATELY.—An employer may elect to have this paragraph applied separately with respect to individuals eligible for benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act at any time during the taxable year and with respect to individuals not so eligible.

"(D) BENEFIT MAINTENANCE PERIOD.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'benefit maintenance period' means the 5 taxable year period beginning with the taxable year in which the qualified transfer occurs. "SEC. 251. ENFORCING DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS.

"(a) Fiscal Years 1991-1995 Enforcement.—

"(1) SEQUESTRATION.—Within 15 calendar days after Congress adjourns to end a session, there shall be a sequestration to eliminate a budget-year breach, if any, within any category.

"(2) Eliminating a breach.—Each non-exempt account within a category shall be reduced by a dollar amount calculated by multiplying the enacted level of sequestrable budgetary resources in that account at that time by the uniform percentage necessary to eliminate a breach within that category; except that the health programs set forth in section 256(e) shall not be reduced by more than 2 percent and the uniform percent applicable to all other programs under this paragraph shall be increased (if necessary) to a level sufficient to eliminate that breach. If, within a category, the discretionary spending limits for both new budget authority and outlays are breached, the uniform percentage shall be calculated by—

"(A) first, calculating the uniform percentage necessary to eliminate the breach in new budget authority, and

"(B) second, if any breach in outlays remains, increasing the uniform percentage to a level sufficient to eliminate that breach.

"(3) MILITARY PERSONNEL.—If the President uses the authority to exempt any military personnel from sequestration under section 255(h), each account within subfunctional category 051 other than those military personnel accounts for which the authority provided under section 255(h), has been exercised shall be further reduced by a dollar amount calculated by multiplying the enacted level of non-exempt budgetary resources in that account at that time by the uniform percentage necessary to offset the total dollar amount by which outlays are not reduced in military personnel accounts by reason of the use of such authority.

"(4) PART-YEAR APPROPRIATIONS.—If, on the date specified in paragraph (1), there is in effect an Act making or continuing appropriations for part of a fiscal year for any non-exempt budget account, then—

"(A) the enacted amount in that account shall be deemed to be the annualized amount otherwise available by law; and

"(B) the dollar sequestration calculated for that account under paragraphs (2) and (3) shall be subtracted from—

"(i) the annualized amount otherwise available by law in that account under that or a subsequent part-year appropriation; and

"(ii) when a full-year appropriation for that account is enacted, from the amount otherwise provided by the full-year appropriation.

"(5) LOOK-BACK.—If, after the date specified in paragraph (1), an appropriation for the fiscal year in progress is enacted that causes a breach within a category for that year (after taking into account any sequestration of amounts within that category), the discretionary spending limits for that category for the next fiscal year shall be reduced by the amount or amounts of that breach.

"(6) OMB ESTIMATES.—Within 5 calendar days after the enactment of any discretionary appropriations, OMB shall publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the amount of discretionary new budget authority and outlays for the current year (if any) and the budget year provided by that legislation. OMB shall use those published estimates for the purposes of this subsection.

"(b) ADJUSTMENTS TO DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS.—(1) When the President submits the budget under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, for budget year 1992, 1993, 1994, or 1995 (except as otherwise indicated), OMB shall calculate (in the order set forth below), and the budget shall include, adjustments to discretionary spending limits (and those limits as cumulatively adjusted) for the budget year and each outyear through 1995 to reflect the following:

"(A) CHANGES IN CONCEPTS AND DEFINITIONS.—The adjustments produced by the amendments made by subtitles A and B of title XIV of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 or by any other changes in concepts and definitions shall be the baseline levels of new budget authority and outlays using current concepts and definitions minus those levels using the concepts and definitions in effect before such changes.

"(B) CHANGES IN INFLATION.—(i) For a budget submitted for budget year 1992 or 1993, the adjustments produced by changes in inflation shall be the levels of discretionary new budget authority and outlays in the baseline (calculated using current estimates) subtracted from those levels in that baseline recalculated with the baseline inflators multiplied by the inflation adjustment factor computed under clause (ii).

"(ii) For a budget year the inflation adjustment factor shall be the ratio between the level of cumulative inflation measured for the fiscal year most recently completed and the applicable estimated level for that year set forth below:

"For 1990, 130.3.

"For 1991, 137.1.

"For 1992, 142.7.

"For 1993, 147.4.

Cumulative inflation shall be measured by the index of the fiscal year average of the estimated gross national product implicit price deflator, with the calendar year 1989 index equal to 100.0.

"(C) CREDIT REESTIMATES.—For a budget submitted for budget year 1993 or 1994, the adjustments produced by reestimates to costs of Federal credit programs shall be, for any such program, a current estimate of new budget authority and outlays associated with a baseline projection of the prior year's gross loan level for that program minus the baseline projection of the prior year's new budget authority and associated outlays for that program.

(2) When OMB submits a sequestration report under section 254(e) for fiscal year 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, or 1995 (except as otherwise indicated), OMB shall calculate (in the order set forth below), and the sequestration report and subsequent budgets submitted by the President under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, shall include, adjustments to discretionary spending limits (and those limits as adjusted) for the fiscal year and each succeeding year through 1995, as follows:

"(A) IRS FUNDING.—To the extent that appropriations requested by the President are enacted that provide additional new budget authority or result in additional outlays (as compared to the summer 1990 CBO baseline) for the Internal Revenue Service compliance initiative in any fiscal year, the adjustments for that year shall be those amounts, but shall not exceed the amounts set forth below:

"For fiscal year 1991, $191,000,000 in new budget authority and $183,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1992, $172,000,000 in new budget authority and $169,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1993, $183,000,000 in new budget authority and $179,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1994, $187,000,000 in new budget authority and $183,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1995, $188,000,000 in new budget authority and $184,000,000 in outlays.

"(B) DEBT FORGIVENESS.—If in calendar year 1990 or 1991 an appropriation is enacted that provides debt relief proposed by the President and approved by the Congress, the adjustments shall be the estimated costs of that forgiveness, but shall not exceed the amounts set forth below:

"For fiscal year 1991, $157,000,000 in new budget authority and $207,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1992, $177,000,000 in new budget authority and $294,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1993, $205,000,000 in new budget authority and $361,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1994, $246,000,000 in new budget authority and $446,000,000 in outlays.

"For fiscal year 1995, $300,000,000 in new budget authority and $522,000,000 in outlays.

"(C) IMF FUNDING.—If, for fiscal year 1992, 1993, 1994, or 1995, an appropriation is enacted that provides amounts for a quota increase to the International Monetary Fund, the adjustment shall be the amount provided.

"(D) EMERGENCY APPROPRIATIONS.—If, for fiscal year 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, or 1995, appropriations are enacted that the President determines are for emergency purposes, the adjustment shall be the total of such appropriations determined to be for emergency purposes and the outlays flowing in all years from such appropriations.

"(E) SPECIAL ALLOWANCE FOR NEW BUDGET AUTHORITY.—If, for fiscal year 1991, 1992, or 1993, the amount of discretionary new budget authority provided in appropriation Acts exceeds the discretionary spending limit on new budget authority for any category for a fiscal year, the adjustment is the amount of the excess, but not to exceed 0.2 percent of the sum of the adjusted discretionary spending limits on new budget authority for all categories for that year. However, the sum of special allowance adjustments in all categories for that year shall not exceed 0.4 percent of the sum of the limits on new budget authority for all categories for that year. Adjustments that would exist but for the preceding sentence shall be reduced by the uniform percentage necessary to comply with that sentence.

"(F) SPECIAL OUTLAY ALLOWANCE.—If in any fiscal year except 1991 outlays for a category exceed the discretionary spending limit for that category but new budget authority does not exceed its limit for that category (after application of the first step of a sequestration described in subsection (a)(2), if necessary), the adjustment is the amount of the excess, but not to exceed $2,500,000,000 in the defense category, $1,500,000,000 in the international category, or $2,500,000,000 in the domestic category (as applicable) in fiscal year 1992 or 1993, and not to exceed $6,500,000,000 in fiscal year 1994 or 1995.

"(c) APPLICABILITY OF ADJUSTED LIMITS.—Discretionary spending limits as adjusted by this section shall be considered to be the applicable limits for all purposes of this Act.

"SEC. 252. ENFORCING PAY-AS-YOU-GO.

"(a) FISCAL YEARS 1992-1995 ENFORCEMENT.—The purpose of this section is to assure that any legislation (enacted after the date of enactment of this section) affecting direct spending or receipts that increases the deficit in any fiscal year covered by this Act will trigger an offsetting sequestration.

"(b) SEQUESTRATION; LOOK-BACK.—On October 15 of each fiscal year, there shall be a sequestration to offset the amount of any net deficit increase in that fiscal year and the prior fiscal year caused by all direct spending and receipts legislation enacted after the date of enactment of this section (after adjusting for any sequestration of direct spending accounts in a prior year). OMB shall calculate the amount of deficit increase, if any, in those fiscal years by adding—

"(1) all estimates of direct spending and receipts legislation published under subsection (e) applicable to those fiscal years, except that any amounts included in such estimates resulting from full funding of, and continuation of, deposit insurance law in effect on the date of enactment of this section shall not be included in the addition; and

"(2) the estimated amount of savings in direct spending programs applicable to those fiscal years resulting from the prior year's sequestration under this section or section 253, if any, as published in OMB's October 15 sequestration report for that year.

"(c) ELIMINATING A DEFICIT INCREASE.—(1) The first $5,000,000,000 required to be sequestered in a fiscal year under subsection (a) shall be obtained from non-exempt direct spending accounts. Half of any remaining amounts required to be sequestered in that fiscal year, if any, shall be obtained from such accounts and half from non-exempt discretionary appropriation accounts.

"(2) Actions to reduce direct spending accounts shall be taken in the following order:

"(A) FIRST.—All reductions in automatic spending increases specified in section 256(a) shall be made.

"(B) SECOND.—If additional reductions in direct spending accounts are required to be made, the maximum reductions permissible under sections 256(b) (guaranteed student loans) and 256(c) (foster care and adoption assistance) shall be made.

"(C) THIRD.—If additional reductions in direct spending accounts are required to be made, each remaining non-exempt direct spending account shall be reduced by the uniform percentage necessary to make the reductions in direct spending required by paragraph (1); except that the medicare programs specified in section 256(d) shall not be reduced by more than 4 percent and the uniform percentage applicable to all other direct spending programs under this paragraph shall be increased (if necessary) to a level sufficient to achieve the required reduction in direct spending.

"(3) Each non-exempt discretionary appropriation account shall be reduced by the uniform percentage necessary to make the reductions in discretionary appropriations required by paragraph (1); except that the health programs set forth in section 256(e) shall not be reduced by more than 2 percent and the uniform percent applicable to all other programs under this paragraph shall be increased (if necessary) to a level sufficient to eliminate that breach; except that adjustments shall be made if any military personnel are exempt under the procedure set forth in section 251(a)(3).

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, accounts shall be assumed to be at the level in the baseline.

"(d) PART-YEAR APPROPRIATIONS.—If, on October 15, there is in effect an Act making or continuing appropriations for part of a fiscal year for any non-exempt budget account, then the dollar sequestration calculated for that account under subsection (c) shall be subtracted from—

"(1) the annualized amount otherwise available by law in that account under that or a subsequent part-year appropriation; and

"(2) when a full-year appropriation for that account is enacted, from the amount otherwise provided by the full-year appropriation; except that the amount to be subtracted from that account shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the savings achieved by that appropriation when the enacted amount is less than the baseline for that account.

"(e) OMB ESTIMATES.—Within 15 calendar days after the enactment of any direct spending or receipts legislation enacted after the date of enactment of this section, OMB shall publish in the Federal Register an estimate of the amount of change in outlays or receipts, as the case may be, in each fiscal year through fiscal year 1995 resulting from that legislation. Those estimates shall be made using current economic and technical assumptions.

"SEC. 253. ENFORCING DEFICIT TARGETS.

"(a) SEQUESTRATION.—On October 15 of each fiscal year, after any sequestration required by section 252 (pay-as-you-go), there shall be a sequestration to eliminate the excess deficit (if any remains) if it exceeds the margin. The excess deficit is the amount, if any, by which the estimated deficit for the budget year exceeds the maximum deficit amount for that year minus the deposit insurance reestimate for that year, if any, calculated under subsection (h).

"(b) ESTIMATED DEFICIT; MARGIN.—

"(1) ESTIMATED DEFICIT.—The estimated deficit for the budget year is the baseline deficit for that year on the applicable snapshot date minus any reductions required to be made under section 252, except that for purposes of estimating the deficit, outlays for discretionary appropriations shall be assumed to be at the discretionary spending limits set forth in the most recent President's budget submitted under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, for that year, rather than at baseline levels.

"(2) MARGIN.—The 'margin' for fiscal year 1994 or 1995 is $15,000,000,000 minus any outlay adjustments for that year under section 251(b)(2)(A)(ii).

"(c) DIVIDING THE SEQUESTRATION.—To eliminate the excess deficit in a budget year, half of the required outlay reductions shall be obtained from non-exempt defense accounts (accounts designated as function 050 in the President's fiscal year 1991 budget submission) and half from non-exempt, non-defense accounts (all other non-exempt accounts).

"(d) DEFENSE.—Each non-exempt defense account shall be reduced by a dollar amount calculated by multiplying the baseline level of sequestrable budgetary resources in that account at that time by the uniform percentage necessary to carry out subsection (c)(2), except that adjustments shall be made if any military personnel are exempt under the procedure set forth in section 251(a)(3).

"(e) NON-DEFENSE.—Actions to reduce non-defense accounts shall be taken in the following order:

"(1) FIRST.—All reductions in automatic spending increases under section 256(a) shall be made.

"(2) SECOND.—If additional reductions in non-defense accounts are required to be made, the maximum reduction permissible under sections 256(b) (guaranteed student loans) and 256(c) (foster care and adoption assistance) shall be made.

"(3) THIRD.—If additional reductions in non-defense accounts are required to be made, each remaining non-exempt, non-defense account shall be reduced by the uniform percentage necessary to make the reductions in non-defense outlays required by subsection (c)(2), except that—

"(A) the medicare program specified in section 256(d) shall not be reduced by more than 2 percent in total including any reduction of less than 2 percent made under section 252 or, if it has been reduced by 2 percent or more under section 252, it may not be further reduced under this section; and

"(B) the health programs set forth in section 256(e) shall not be reduced by more than 2 percent in total (including any reduction made under section 252), and the uniform percent applicable to all other programs under this subsection shall be increased (if necessary) to a level sufficient to achieve the required reduction in non-defense outlays.

"(f) BASELINE ASSUMPTIONS; PART-YEAR APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) BUDGET ASSUMPTIONS.—For purposes of subsections (c), (d), and (e), accounts shall be assumed to be at the level in the baseline.

"(2) PART-YEAR APPROPRIATIONS.—If, on October 15, there is in effect an Act making or continuing appropriations for part of a fiscal year for any non-exempt budget account, then the dollar sequestration calculated for that account under subsection (d) or (e), as applicable, shall be subtracted from—

"(A) the annualized amount otherwise available by law in that account under that or a subsequent part-year appropriation; and

"(B) when a full-year appropriation for that account is enacted, from the amount otherwise provided by the full-year appropriation; except that the amount to be sequestered from that account shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the savings achieved by that appropriation when the enacted amount is less than the baseline for that account.

"(g) ADJUSTMENTS TO MAXIMUM DEFICIT AMOUNTS.—

"(1) ADJUSTMENTS.—

"(A) When the President submits the budget for fiscal year 1992, the maximum deficit amounts for fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995 shall be adjusted to reflect up-to-date reestimates of economic and technical assumptions and any changes in concepts or definitions. When the President submits the budget for fiscal year 1993, the maximum deficit amounts for fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995 shall be further adjusted to reflect up-to-date reestimates of economic and technical assumptions and any changes in concepts or definitions.

"(B) When submitting the budget for fiscal year 1994, the President may choose to adjust the maximum deficit amounts for fiscal years 1994 and 1995 to reflect up-to-date reestimates of economic and technical assumptions and any changes in concepts or definitions. If the President chooses to adjust the maximum deficit amount when submitting the fiscal year 1994 budget, the President may choose to invoke the same adjustment procedure when submitting the budget for fiscal year 1995. In each case, the President must choose between making no adjustment or the full adjustment described in paragraph (2). If the President chooses to make that full adjustment, then those procedures for adjusting discretionary spending limits described in sections 251(b)(1)(B), 251(b)(1)(C), and 251(b)(2)(E), otherwise applicable through fiscal year 1993 or 1994 (as the case may be), shall be deemed to apply for fiscal year 1994 (and 1995 if applicable).

Each adjustment shall be made by increasing or decreasing the maxiumum deficit amounts set forth in section 601 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

"(2) CALCULATIONS OF ADJUSTMENTS.—The required increase or decrease shall be calculated as follows:

"(A) The baseline deficit or surplus shall be calculated using up-to-date economic and technical assumptions, using current concepts and definitions, and for the levels of discretionary appropriations, using the discretionary spending limits set forth in section 601 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 as adjusted under section 251.

"(B) The net deficit increase or decrease caused by all direct spending and receipts legislation enacted after the date of enactment of this section (after adjusting for any sequestration of direct spending accounts) shall be calculated for each fiscal year by adding—

"(i) the estimates of direct spending and receipts legislation published under section 252(e) applicable to each such fiscal year; and

"(ii) the estimated amount of savings in direct spending programs applicable to each such fiscal year resulting from the prior year's sequestration under this section or section 252 of direct spending, if any, as published in OMB's final sequestration report for that year.

"(C) The amount calculated under subparagraph (B) shall be subtracted from the amount calculated under subparagraph (A).

"(D) The maximum deficit amount set forth in section 601 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall be subtracted from the amount calculated under subparagraph (C).

"(E) The amount calculated under subparagraph (D) shall be the amount of the adjustment required by paragraph (1).

"(h) TREATMENT OF DEPOSIT INSURANCE.—

"(1) INITIAL ESTIMATES.—The initial estimates of the net costs of federal deposit insurance (assuming full funding of, and continuation of, existing law) are as follows:

"For fiscal year 1992, $77,700,000,000.

"For fiscal year 1993, $18,800,000,000.

"For fiscal year 1994, −$54,200,000,000.

"For fiscal year 1995, −$45,300,000,000.

"(2) REESTIMATES.—For any fiscal year, the amount of the reestimate of deposit insurance costs shall be calculated by subtracting the amount set forth in paragraph (1) for that year from the current estimate of deposit insurance costs (but assuming full funding of, and continuation of, deposit insurance law in effect on the date of enactment of this section).

"SEC. 254. REPORTS AND ORDERS.

"(a) TIMETABLE.—The timetable with respect to this part for any budget year is as follows:

The reports shall also contain estimates of the effects on outlays of the sequestration in each outyear through 1995 for direct spending programs. The reports shall explain significant differences (if any) between OMB and CBO estimates for each such account.

"(2) PRESIDENTIAL ORDER.—On the date specified in subsection (a), if in its pay-as-you-go and deficit sequestration report OMB estimates that any sequestration is required, the President shall issue an order fully implementing without change all sequestrations required by OMB calculations set forth in that report. This order shall be effective on issuance.

"(e) DISCRETIONARY SEQUESTRATION REPORT; PRESIDENTIAL ORDER.—

"(1) DISCRETIONARY SEQUESTRATION REPORT.—Within 15 days after Congress adjourns to end a session, OMB and CBO shall each issue a discretionary sequestration report to the President and the Congress setting forth estimates for each of the following:

"(A) For the current year and each subsequent year through 1995 the applicable discretionary spending limits for each category and an explanation of any adjustments in such limits under section 251.

"(B) For the current year and the budget year the estimated new budget authority and outlays for each category and the breach, if any, in each category.

"(C) For each category for which a sequestration is required, the sequestration percentage necessary to achieve the required reduction.

"(2) PRESIDENTIAL ORDER.—On the date specified in subsection (a), if in its discretionary sequestration report OMB estimates that any sequestration is required, the President shall issue an order fully implementing without change all sequestrations required by OMB calculations set forth in that report. This order shall be effective on issuance.

"(f) GAO COMPLIANCE REPORT.—On the date specified in subsection (a), the Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress and the President a report on—

"(k) TREATMENT OF FEDERAL ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—

"(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, administrative expenses incurred by the departments and agencies, including independent agencies, of the Federal Government in connection with any program, project, activity, or account shall be subject to reduction pursuant to an order issued under section 255, without regard to any exemption, exception, limitation, or special rule which is otherwise applicable with respect to such program, project, activity, or account under this part.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, administrative expenses of any program, project, activity, or account which is self-supporting and does not receive appropriations shall be subject to reduction under a sequester order, unless specifically exempted in this joint resolution.

"(3) Payments made by the Federal Government to reimburse or match administrative costs incurred by a State or political subdivision under or in connection with any program, project, activity, or account shall not be considered administrative expenses of the Federal Government for purposes of this section, and shall be subject to reduction or sequestration under this part to the extent (and only to the extent) that other payments made by the Federal Government under or in connection with that program, project, activity, or account are subject to such reduction or sequestration; except that Federal payments made to a State as reimbursement of administrative costs incurred by such State under or in connection with the unemployment compensation programs specified in subsection (h)(1) shall be subject to reduction or sequestration under this part notwithstanding the exemption otherwise granted to such programs under that subsection.

"(4) The previous provisions of this subsection shall not apply with respect to the following:

"(A) Comptroller of the Currency.

"(B) Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

"(C) Office of Thrift Supervision.

"(D) National Credit Union Administration.

"SEC. 256. SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) AUTOMATIC SPENDING INCREASES.—Automatic spending increases are increases in outlays due to changes in indexes in the following programs:

"(1) National Wool Act;

"(2) Special milk program; and

"(3) Vocational rehabilitation.

In those programs all amounts other than the automatic spending increases shall be exempt from reduction under any order issued under this part.

"(b) EFFECT OF ORDERS ON THE GUARANTEED STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM.—"(1) Any reductions which are required to be achieved from the student loan programs operated pursuant to part B of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as a consequence of an order issued pursuant to section 254, shall be achieved only from loans described in paragraphs (2) and (3) by the application of the measures described in such paragraphs.

"(2) For any loan made during the period beginning on the date that an order issued under section 254 takes effect with respect to a fiscal year and ending at the close of such fiscal year, the rate used in computing the special allowance payment pursuant to section 438(b)(2)(A)(iii) of such Act for each of the first four special allowance payments for such loan shall be adjusted by reducing such rate by the lesser of—

"(A) 0.40 percent, or

"(B) the percentage by which the rate specified in such section exceeds 3 percent.

"(3) For any loan made during the period beginning on the date that an order issued under section 254 takes effect with respect to a fiscal year and ending at the close of such fiscal year, the origination fee which is authorized to be collected pursuant to section 438(c)(2) of such Act shall be increased by 0.50 percent.

"(c) TREATMENT OF FOSTER CARE AND ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—Any order issued by the President under section 254 shall make the reduction which is otherwise required under the foster care and adoption assistance programs (established by part E of title IV of the Social Security Act) only with respect to payments and expenditures made by States in which increases in foster care maintenance payment rates or adoption assistance payment rates (or both) are to take effect during the fiscal year involved, and only to the extent that the required reduction can be accomplished by applying a uniform percentage reduction to the Federal matching payments that each such State would otherwise receive under section 474 of that Act (for such fiscal year) for that portion of the State's payments which is attributable to the increases taking effect during that year. No State may, after the date of the enactment of this Act, make any change in the timetable for making payments under a State plan approved under part E of title IV of the Social Security Act which has the effect of changing the fiscal year in which expenditures under such part are made.

"(d) SPECIAL RULES FOR MEDICARE PROGRAM.—

"(1) MAXIMUM PERCENTAGE REDUCTION IN INDIVIDUAL PAYMENT AMOUNTS.—To achieve the total percentage reduction in those programs required by sections 252 and 253, OMB shall determine, and the applicable Presidential order under section 254 shall implement, the percentage reduction that shall apply to payments under the health insurance programs under title XVIII of the Social Security Act for services furnished in the fiscal year after the order is issued, such that the reduction made in payments under that order shall achieve the required total percentage reduction in those payments for that fiscal year as determined on a 12-month basis.

"(2) TIMING OF APPLICATION OF REDUCTIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if a reduction is made in payment amounts pursuant to a sequestration order, the reduction shall be applied to payment for services furnished during the effective period of the order. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of inpatient services furnished for an individual, the services shall be considered to be furnished on the date of the individual's discharge from the inpatient facility.

"(B) PAYMENT ON THE BASIS OF COST REPORTING PERIODS.—In the case in which payment for services of a provider of services is made under title XVIII of the Social Security Act on a basis relating to the reasonable cost incurred for the services during a cost reporting period of the provider, if a reduction is made under paragraph (1) in payment amounts pursuant to a sequestration order, the reduction shall be applied to payment for costs for such services incurred at any time during each cost reporting period of the provider any part of which occurs during the effective period of the order, but only (for each such cost reporting period) in the same proportion as the fraction of the cost reporting period that occurs during the effective period of the order.

"(3) NO INCREASE IN BENEFICIARY CHARGES IN ASSIGNMENT-RELATED CASES.—If a reduction in payment amounts is made under paragraph (1) for services for which payment under part B of title XVIII of the Social Security Act is made on the basis of an assignment described in section 1842(b)(3)(B)(ii), in accordance with section 1842(b)(6)(B), or under the procedure described in section 1870(f)(1), of such Act, the person furnishing the services shall be considered to have accepted payment of the reasonable charge for the services, less any reduction in payment amount made pursuant to a sequestration order, as payment in full.

"(4) NO EFFECT ON COMPUTATION OF AAPCC.—In computing the adjusted average per capita cost for purposes of section 1876(a)(4) of the Social Security Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall not take into account any reductions in payment amounts which have been or may be effected under this part.

"(e) CERTAIN HEALTH PROGRAMS.—The maximum permissible reduction in new budget authority for the following programs for any fiscal year pursuant to a sequestration under sections 251, 252, or 253 is 2 percent:

"(1) Community health centers (75-0350-0-1-550).

"(2) Migrant health centers (75-0350-0-1-550).

"(3) Indian health facilities (75-0391-0-1-551).

"(4) Indian health services (75-0390-0-1-551).

"(5) Veterans' medical care (36-0160-0-1-703).

"(f) TREATMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT PROGRAM.—Notwithstanding any change in the display of budget accounts, any order issued by the President under section 254 shall accomplish the full amount of any required reduction in expenditures under sections 455 and 458 of the Social Security Act by reducing the Federal matching rate for State administrative costs under such program, as specified (for the fiscal year involved) in section 455(a) of such Act, to the extent necessary to reduce such expenditures by that amount.

"(g) EXTENDED UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION.—(1) A State may reduce each weekly benefit payment made under the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970 for any week of unemployment occurring during any period with respect to which payments are reduced under an order issued under section 254 by a percentage not to exceed the percentage by which the Federal payment to the State under section 204 of such Act is to be reduced for such week as a result of such order.

"(2) A reduction by a State in accordance with paragraph (1) shall not be considered as a failure to fulfill the requirements of section 3304(a)(11) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(h) COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as modified by existing law enacted after 1985, this subsection shall govern any sequestration of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

"(2) POWERS AND AUTHORITIES OF THE COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION.—This title shall not restrict the Commodity Credit Corporation in the discharge of its authority and responsibility as a corporation to buy and sell commodities in world trade, to use the proceeds as a revolving fund to meet other obligations and otherwise operate as a corporation, the purpose for which it was created.

"(3) REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS MADE UNDER CONTRACTS.—(A) Payments and loan eligibility under any contract entered into with a person by the Commodity Credit Corporation prior to the time an order has been issued under section 254 shall not be reduced by an order subsequently issued. Subject to subparagraph (B), after an order is issued under such section for a fiscal year, any cash payments made by the Commodity Credit Corporation—

"(i) under the terms of any one-year contract entered into in such fiscal year and after the issuance of the order; and

"(ii) out of an entitlement account, to any person (including any producer, lender, or guarantee entity) shall be subject to reduction under the order.

"(B) Each contract entered into with producers or producer cooperatives with respect to a particular crop of a commodity and subject to reduction under subparagraph (A) shall be reduced in accordance with the same terms and conditions. If some, but not all, contracts applicable to a crop of a commodity have been entered into prior to the issuance of an order under section 254, the order shall provide that the necessary reduction in payments under contracts applicable to the commodity be uniformly applied to all contracts for the next succeeding crop of the commodity, under the authority provided in paragraph (4).

"(3) DELAYED REDUCTION IN OUTLAYS PERMISSIBLE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this law, if an order under section 254 is issued with respect to a fiscal year, any reduction under the order applicable to contracts described in paragraph (2) may provide for reductions in outlays for the account involved to occur in the fiscal year following the fiscal year to which the order is issued. No other account, or other program, project, or activity, shall bear an increased reduction for the fiscal year to which the order applies as a result of the operation of the preceding sentence.

"(5) UNIFORM PERCENTAGE RATE OF REDUCTION AND OTHER LIMITATIONS.—All reductions described in paragraph (3) which are required to be made in connection with an order issued under section 254 with respect to a fiscal year—

"(A) shall be made so as to ensure that outlays for each program, project, activity, or account involved are reduced by a percentage rate that is uniform for all such programs, projects, activities, and accounts, and may not be made so as to achieve a percentage rate of reduction in any such item exceeding the rate specified in the order; and

"(B) with respect to commodity price support and income protection programs, shall be made in such manner and under such procedures as will attempt to ensure that—

"(i) uncertainty as to the scope of benefits under any such program is minimized;

"(ii) any instability in market prices for agricultural commodities resulting from the reduction is minimized; and

"(iii) normal production and marketing relationships among agricultural commodities (including both contract and non-contract commodities) are not distorted.

In meeting the criterion set out in clause (iii) of subparagraph (B) of the preceding sentence, the President shall take into consideration that reductions under an order may apply to programs for two or more agricultural commodities that use the same type of production or marketing resources or that are alternative commodities among which a producer could choose in making annual production decisions.

"(6) CERTAIN AUTHORITY NOT TO BE LIMITED.—Nothing in this joint resolution shall limit or reduce, in any way, any appropriation that provides the Commodity Credit Corporation with funds to cover the Corporation's net realized losses.

"(i) EFFECTS OF SEQUESTRATION.—The effects of sequestration shall be as follows:

"(A) Budgetary resources sequestered from any account other than a trust fund account shall permanently revert to the Treasury.

"(B) Except as otherwise provided, the same percentage sequestration shall apply to all programs, projects, and activities within a budget account (with programs, projects, and activities as delineated in the most recently enacted appropriation Act covering that account, or for accounts not included in appropriation Acts, as delineated in the most recently submitted President's budget).

"(C) Administrative regulations or similar actions implementing a sequestration shall be made within 90 days of the sequestration order. To the extent that formula allocations differ at different levels of budgetary resources within an account, program, project, or activity, the sequestration shall be interpreted as producing a lower total appropriation, with the remaining amount of the appropriation being obligated in a manner consistent with program allocation formulas in substantive law.

"(D) Except as otherwise provided, obligations in sequestered accounts shall be reduced only in the fiscal year in which a sequester occurs.

"(E) If an automatic spending increase is sequestered, the increase (in the applicable index) that was disregarded as a result of that sequestration shall not be taken into account in any fiscal year.

"(F) Except as otherwise provided, sequestration in accounts for which program obligations are indefinite shall be taken in a manner to ensure, to the greatest extent possible, that program obligations in the fiscal year of a sequestration are reduced, from the level that would actually have occurred, by the applicable sequestration percentage.

"SEC. 257. THE BASELINE.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For any budget year, the baseline refers to a projection of current-year levels of new budget authority, outlays, revenues, and the surplus or deficit into the budget year and the outyears based on laws enacted through the applicable date.

"(b) REVENUES, FEES, AND DIRECT SPENDING.—For the budget year and each outyear, the baseline shall be calculated using the following assumptions:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Revenue laws, laws providing for fees, and laws providing or creating direct spending are assumed to operate in the manner specified in those laws for each such year and funding for spending requirements is assumed to be adequate to make all payments required by those laws.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—(A) No program with estimated current-year outlays greater than $50 million shall be assumed to expire in the budget year or outyears.

"(B) Agricultural price support programs administered through the Commmodity Credit Corporation are assumed to be extended under the terms, support prices, loan rates, and other rates of payment in effect the day before the expiration of the Food Security Act of 1985 or the Food and Agricultural Resources Act of 1990, as applicable.

"(C) The increase for veterans' compensation for a fiscal year is assumed to be the same as that required by law for veterans' pensions unless otherwise provided by law enacted in that session.

"(D) Excise taxes dedicated to a trust fund, if expiring, are assumed to be extended at current rates.

"(3) HEALTH INSURANCE TRUST FUND.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the receipts and disbursements of the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund shall be included in all calculations required by this Act.

"(c) DISCRETIONARY APPROPRIATIONS.—For the budget year and each outyear, the baseline shall be calculated using the following assumptions regarding all amounts other than those covered by subsection (b):

"(1) INFLATION OF CURRENT-YEAR APPROPRIATIONS.—Budgetary resources other than unobligated balances shall be at the level provided for the budget year in full-year appropriation Acts. If for any account a full-year appropriation has not yet been enacted, budgetary resources other than unobligated balances shall be at the level available in the current year, adjusted sequentially and cumulatively for expiring housing contracts as specified in paragraph (2), for social insurance administrative expenses as specified in paragraph (3), for pay annualization as specified in paragraph (4), for inflation as specified in paragraph (5), and to account for changes required by law in the level of agency payments for personnel benefits other than pay.

"(2) EXPIRING HOUSING CONTRACTS.—New budget authority to renew expiring multiyear subsidized housing contracts shall be adjusted to reflect the difference in the number of such contracts that are scheduled to expire in that fiscal year and the number expiring in the current year, with the per-contract renewal cost equal to the average current-year cost of renewal contracts.

"(3) SOCIAL INSURANCE ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Budgetary resources for the administrative expenses of social insurance trust funds shall be adjusted by the percentage change in the beneficiary population from the current year to that fiscal year.

"(4) PAY ANNUALIZATION.—If current-year pay adjustments for Federal employees occur on a date other than October 1 of the current year, current-year new budget authority for such employees shall be adjusted by the percentage necessary to reflect the 12-month cost of those adjustments.

"(5) INFLATORS.—The inflator used in paragraph (1) to adjust budgetary resources relating to personnel shall be the percent by which the average of the Bureau of Labor Statistics Employment Cost Index (excluding sales) for that fiscal year differs from such index for the current year. The inflator used in paragraph (1) to adjust all other budgetary resources shall be the percent by which the average of the estimated gross national product fixed-weight price deflator for that fiscal year differs from the average of such estimated deflator for the current year.

"(6) CURRENT-YEAR APPROPRIATIONS.—If, for any account, a continuing appropriation is in effect for less than the entire current year, then the current-year amount shall be assumed to equal the amount that would be available if that continuing appropriation covered the entire fiscal year. If law permits the transfer of budget authority among budget accounts in the current year, the current-year level for an account shall reflect transfers accomplished by the submission of, or assumed for the current year in, the President's original budget for the budget year.

"(d) ASSET SALES AND LOAN PREPAYMENTS.—The proceeds of asset sales and loan prepayments shall be treated as means of financing the deficit.

"(e) UP-TO-DATE CONCEPTS.—In deriving the baseline for any budget year or outyear, current-year amounts shall be calculated using the concepts and definitions that are required for that budget year.

"SEC. 258. SUSPENSION IN THE EVENT OF WAR OR LOW GROWTH.

"(a) PROCEDURES IN THE EVENT OF A LOW GROWTH REPORT.—

"(1) TRIGGER.—Whenever CBO issues a low-growth report under section 254(g), the Majority Leader of each House shall introduce a joint resolution (in the form set forth in paragraph (2)) declaring that the conditions specified in section 254(g) are met and suspending the relevant provisions of this title, title VI of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, and section 1103 of title 31, United States Code.

"(2) FORM OF JOINT RESOLUTION.—

"(A) The matter after the resolving clause in any joint resolution introduced pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be as follows: 'That the Congress declares that the conditions specified in section 254(g) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 are met, and the implementation of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, chapter 11 of title 31, United States Code, and part C of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 are modified as described in section 258(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.'.

"(B) The title of the joint resolution shall be 'Joint resolution suspending certain provisions of law pursuant to section 258(a)(2) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.'; and the joint resolution shall not contain any preamble.

"(3) COMMITTEE ACTION.—Each joint resolution introduced pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be referred to the appropriate committees of the House involved; and such Committee shall report the joint resolution to its House without amendment on or before the fifth day on which such House is in session after the date on which the joint resolution is introduced. If the Committee fails to report the joint resolution within the five-day period referred to in the preceding sentence, it shall be automatically discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution, and the joint resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar.

"(4) CONSIDERATION OF JOINT RESOLUTION.—

"(A) A vote on final passage of a joint resolution reported to the Senate or discharged pursuant to paragraph (3) shall be taken on or before the close of the fifth calendar day of session after the date on which the joint resolution is reported or after the Committee has been discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution. If prior to the passage by one House of a joint resolution of that House, that House receives the same joint resolution from the other House, then—

"(i) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no such joint resolution had been received from the other House, but

"(ii) the vote on final passage shall be on the joint resolution of the other House.

When the joint resolution is agreed to, the Clerk of the House of Representatives (in the case of a House joint resolution agreed to in the House of Representatives) or the Secretary of the Senate (in the case of a Senate joint resolution agreed to in the Senate) shall cause the joint resolution to be engrossed, certified, and transmitted to the other House of the Congress as soon as practicable.

"(B)(i) A motion in the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution under this paragraph shall be privileged and not debatable. The motion is not in order after the eighth calendar day (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) beginning after a joint resolution (to which the motion applies) is introduced. The motion is privileged in the Senate and is not debatable. The motion is not subject to amendment, or to a motion to postpone, or to a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution is agreed to, the Senate shall immediately proceed to consideration of the joint resolution without intervening motion, order, or other business, and the joint resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the Senate until disposed of.

"(ii) In the Senate, an amendment that is otherwise in order shall be in order notwithstanding the fact that it amends the joint resolution in more than one place or amends language previously amended. It shall not be in order in the Senate to vote on the question of agreeing to such a joint resolution or any amendment thereto unless the figures then contained in such joint resolution or amendment are mathematically consistent.

"(4) VOTE ON FINAL PASSAGE.—Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on a joint resolution introduced under subsection (a), a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the Senate, and the disposition of any amendments under paragraph (3), the vote on final passage of the joint resolution shall occur.

"(C) Upon disposition of the joint resolution received from the House, it shall no longer be in order to consider the resolution originated in the Senate.

"(8) SENATE ACTION ON HOUSE RESOLUTION.—If the Senate receives from the House of Representatives a joint resolution introduced under subsection (a) after the Senate has disposed of a Senate originated resolution which is identical to the House passed joint resolution, the action of the Senate with regard to the disposition of the Senate originated joint resolution shall be deemed to be the action of the Senate with regard to the House originated joint resolution. If it is not identical to the House passed joint resolution, then the Senate shall be considered to have passed the joint resolution of the House as amended by the text of the Senate joint resolution.".

"(3) APPLICABLE RULES.—If the rules of this paragraph apply to any transaction or item, the treatment of such transaction (or the amount and treatment of any such item) shall be determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion from the Secretary's own knowledge or from such information as the Secretary may obtain through testimony or otherwise.

SEC. 13321. INCREASE IN REVERSION TAX.

Section 4980(a) (relating to tax on reversion of qualified plan assets to employer) is amended by striking "15 percent" and inserting "20 percent".

SEC. 13322. ADDITIONAL TAX IF NO REPLACEMENT PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) INCREASE IN TAX FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH REPLACEMENT PLAN OR INCREASE BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting '50 percent' for '20 percent' with respect to any employer reversion from a qualified plan unless—

"(A) the employer establishes or maintains a qualified replacement plan, or

"(B) the plan provides benefit increases meeting the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PLAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified replacement plan' means a qualified plan established or maintained by the employer in connection with a qualified plan termination (hereinafter referred to as the 'replacement plan') with respect to which the following requirements are met:

"(A) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Substantially all of the active participants in the terminated plan who remain as employees of the employer after the termination are active participants in the replacement plan.

"(B) ASSET TRANSFER REQUIREMENT.—

"(i) 30 PERCENT CUSHION.—A direct transfer from the terminated plan to the replacement plan is made before any employer reversion, and the transfer is in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(I) 30 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, over

"(II) the amount determined under clause (ii).

"(ii) REDUCTION FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS.—The amount determined under this clause is an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits under the terminated plan of any participants (including nonactive participants) pursuant to a plan amendment which—

"(I) is adopted during the 60-day period ending on the date of termination of the qualified plan, and

"(II) takes effect immediately on the termination date.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—In the case of the transfer of any amount under clause (i)—

"(I) such amount shall not be includable in the gross income of the employer,

"(II) no deduction shall be allowable with respect to such transfer, and

"(III) such transfer shall not be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of this section.

"(C) ALLOCATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any defined contribution plan, the portion of the amount transferred to the replacement plan under subparagraph (B)(i) is—

"(I) allocated under the plan to the accounts of participants in the plan year in which the transfer occurs, or

"(II) credited to a suspense account and allocated from such account to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the 7-plan-year period beginning with the year of the transfer.

"(ii) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 415 LIMITATION.—If, by reason of any limitation under section 415, any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) may not be allocated to a participant before the close of the 7-year period under such clause—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants by reason of any such limitation, shall be allocated to the participant as provided in section 415.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF INCOME.—Any income on any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) shall be allocated to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the remainder of the period determined under such clause (after application of clause (ii)).

"(iv) UNALLOCATED AMOUNTS AT TERMINATION.—If any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) is not allocated as of the termination date of the plan—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of participants as of such date, except that any amount which may not be allocated by reason of any limitation under section 415 shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants under subclause (I) by reason of such limitation, such portion shall be treated as an employer reversion to which this section applies.

"(3) PRO RATA BENEFIT INCREASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if a plan amendment to the terminated plan is adopted in connection with the termination of the plan which provides pro rata increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of all participants (including nonactive participants) which—

"(i) have an aggregate present value not less than 25 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, and

"(ii) take effect immediately on the termination date.

"(B) PRO RATA INCREASE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a pro rata increase is an increase in the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of each participant (including nonactive participants) in an amount which bears the same ratio to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) as—

"(i) the present value of such participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit (determined without regard to this subsection), bears to

"(ii) the aggregate present value of nonforfeitable accrued benefits of the terminated plan (as so determined).

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of nonactive participants shall not exceed 40 percent of the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) by substituting 'equal to' for 'not less than'.

"(4) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(A) LIMITATIONS.—A benefit may not be increased under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), and an amount may not be allocated to a participant under paragraph (2)(C), if such increase or allocation would result in a failure to meet any requirement under section 401(a)(4) or 415.

"(B) TREATMENT AS EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS.—Any increase in benefits under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), or any allocation of any amount (or income allocable thereto) to any account under paragraph (2)(C), shall be treated as an annual benefit or annual addition for purposes of section 415.

"(C) 10-YEAR PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Except as provided by the Secretary, section 415(b)(5)(D) shall not apply to any increase in benefits by reason of this subsection to the extent that the application of this subparagraph does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (as defined in section 414(q)).

"(5) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) NONACTIVE PARTICIPANT.—The term 'nonactive participant' means an individual who—

"(i) is a participant in pay status as of the termination date,

"(ii) is a beneficiary who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, or

"(iii) is a participant not described in clause (i) or (ii)—

"(I) who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, and

"(II) whose service, which was creditable under the terminated plan, terminated during the period beginning 3 years before the termination date and ending with the date on which the final distribution of assets occurs.

"(B) PRESENT VALUE.—Present value shall be determined as of the termination date and on the same basis as liabilities of the plan are determined on termination.

"(C) REALLOCATION OF INCREASE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2)(C), if any benefit increase is reduced by reason of the last sentence of paragraph (3)(A)(ii) or paragraph (4), the amount of such reduction shall be allocated to the remaining participants on the same basis as other increases (and shall be treated as meeting any allocation requirement of this subsection).

"(D) AGGREGATION OF PLANS.—The Secretary may provide that 2 or more plans may be treated as 1 plan for purposes of determining whether there is a qualified replacement plan under paragraph (2).

"(6) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO EMPLOYER IN BANKRUPTCY.—This subsection shall not apply to an employer who, as of the termination date of the qualified plan, is in bankruptcy liquidation under chapter 7 of title 11 of the United States Code or in similar proceedings under State law."

(b) AMENDMENTS TO EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT.—

(1) FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITY.—Section 404 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1104) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) If, in connection with the termination of a single-employer plan, an employer elects to establish or maintain a qualified replacement plan, or to increase benefits, as provided under section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a fiduciary shall discharge the fiduciary's duties under this title and title IV in accordance with the following requirements:

"(i) under section 4980(d)(2)(A) of such Code with respect to participation in the qualified replacement plan of active participants in the terminated plan,

"(ii) under section 4980(d)(2)(B) of such Code with respect to the receipt of assets from the terminated plan, and

"(iii) under section 4980(d)(2)(C) of such Code with respect to the allocation of assets to participants of the qualified replacement plan.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) any term used in this subsection which is also used in section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall have the same meaning as when used in such section, and

"(B) any reference in this subsection to the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be a reference to such Code as in effect on January 1, 1991."

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If there is a qualified transfer of any excess pension assets of a defined benefit plan (other than a multiemployer plan) to a health benefits account which is part of such plan—

"(1) a trust which is part of such plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of subsection (a) or (h) of section 401 solely by reason of such transfer (or any other action authorized under this section),

"(2) no amount shall be includible in the gross income of the employer maintaining the plan solely by reason of such transfer,

"(3) such transfer shall not be treated—

"(A) as an employer reversion for purposes of section 4980, or

"(4) the limitations of subsection (d) shall apply to such employer.

"(b) QUALIFIED TRANSFER.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified transfer' means a transfer—

"(A) of excess pension assets of a defined benefit plan to a health benefits account which is part of such plan in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990,

"(B) which does not contravene any other provision of law, and

"(C) with respect to which the plan meets—

"(i) the use requirements of subsection (c)(1),

"(ii) the vesting requirements of subsection (c)(2), and

"(iii) the minimum benefit requirements of subsection (c)(3).

"(2) ONLY 1 TRANSFER PER YEAR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No more than 1 transfer with respect to any plan during a taxable year may be treated as a qualified transfer for purposes of this section.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—A transfer described in paragraph (4) shall not be taken into account for purposes of subparagraph (A).

"(3) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—The amount of excess pension assets which may be transferred in a qualified transfer shall not exceed the amount which is reasonably estimated to be the amount the employer maintaining the plan will pay (whether directly or through reimbursement) out of such account during the taxable year of the transfer for qualified current retiree health liabilities.

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (c), a transfer shall be treated as a qualified transfer if such transfer—

"(i) is made after the close of the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, and before the earlier of—

"(I) the due date (including extensions) for the filing of the return of tax for such preceding taxable year, or

"(II) the date such return is filed, and

"(ii) does not exceed the expenditures of the employer for qualified current retiree health liabilities for such preceding taxable year.

"(B) REDUCTION IN DEDUCTION.—The amount of the deductions otherwise allowable under this chapter to an employer for the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, shall be reduced by the amount of any qualified transfer to which this paragraph applies.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO PENSION BENEFITS ACCRUING BEFORE TRANSFER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if the plan provides that the accrued pension benefits of any participant or beneficiary under the plan become nonforfeitable in the same manner which would be required if the plan had terminated immediately before the qualified transfer (or in the case of a participant who separated during the 1-year period ending on the date of the transfer, immediately before such separation).

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—In the case of a qualified transfer described in subsection (b)(4), the requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to any participant who separated from service during the taxable year to which such transfer relates by recomputing such participant's benefits as if subparagraph (A) had applied immediately before such separation.

"(3) MINIMUM COST REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if each group health plan or arrangement under which applicable health benefits are provided provides that the applicable employer cost for each taxable year during the benefit maintenance period shall not be less than the higher of the applicable employer costs for each of the 2 taxable years immediately preceding the taxable year of the qualified transfer.

"(I) without regard to any reduction under subsection (e)(1)(B), and

"(ii) the number of individuals to whom coverage for applicable health benefits was provided during such taxable year.

"(C) ELECTION TO COMPUTE COST SEPARATELY.—An employer may elect to have this paragraph applied separately with respect to individuals eligible for benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act at any time during the taxable year and with respect to individuals not so eligible.

"(D) BENEFIT MAINTENANCE PERIOD.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'benefit maintenance period' means the 5 taxable year period beginning with the taxable year in which the qualified transfer occurs. If a taxable year is in 2 or more overlapping benefit maintenance periods, this paragraph shall be applied by taking into account the highest applicable employer cost required to be provided under subparagraph (A) for such taxable year.

"(d) LIMITATIONS ON EMPLOYER.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) DEDUCTION LIMITATIONS.—No deduction shall be allowed—

"(A) for the transfer of any amount to a health benefits account in a qualified transfer (or any retransfer to the plan under subsection (c)(1)(B)),

"(B) for qualified current retiree health liabilities paid out of the assets (and income) described in subsection (c)(1), or

"(C) for any amounts to which subparagraph (B) does not apply and which are paid for qualified current retiree health liabilities for the taxable year to the extent such amounts are not greater than the excess (if any) of—

"(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (A) (and income allocable thereto), over

"(ii) the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(2) NO CONTRIBUTIONS ALLOWED.—An employer may not contribute after December 31, 1990, any amount to a health benefits account or welfare benefit fund (as defined in section 419(e)(1)) with respect to qualified current retiree health liabilities for which transferred assets are required to be used under subsection (c)(1).

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified current retiree health liabilities' means, with respect to any taxable year, the aggregate amounts (including administrative expenses) which would have been allowable as a deduction to the employer for such taxable year with respect to applicable health benefits provided during such taxable year if—

"(ii) the employer used the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, the rule of section 419(c)(3)(B) shall apply.

"(B) REDUCTIONS FOR AMOUNTS PREVIOUSLY SET ASIDE.—The amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be reduced by any amount previously contributed to a health benefits account or welfare benefit fund (as defined in section 419(e)(1)) to pay for the qualified current retiree health liabilities. The portion of any reserves remaining as of the close of December 31, 1990, shall be allocated on a pro rata basis to qualified current retiree health liabilities.

"(C) APPLICABLE HEALTH BENEFITS.—The term 'applicable health benefits' mean health benefits or coverage which are provided to—

"(i) retired employees who, immediately before the qualified transfer, are entitled to receive such benefits upon retirement and who are entitled to pension benefits under the plan, and

"(D) KEY EMPLOYEES EXCLUDED.—If an employee is a key employee (within the meaning of section 416(i)(1)) with respect to any plan year ending in a taxable year, such employee shall not be taken into account in computing qualified current retiree health liabilities for such taxable year or in calculating applicable employer cost under subsection (c)(3)(B).

"(2) EXCESS PENSION ASSETS.—The term 'excess pension assets' means the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the amount determined under section 412(c)(7)(A)(ii), over

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) the amount determined under section 412(c)(7)(A)(i), or

"(ii) 125 percent of current liability (as defined in section 412(c)(7)(B)).

The determination under this paragraph shall be made as of the most recent valuation date of the plan preceding the qualified transfer.

"(3) HEALTH BENEFITS ACCOUNT.—The term "health benefits account" means an account established and maintained under section 401(h).

"(4) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 412.—In the case of a qualified transfer to a health benefits account—

"(A) any assets transferred in a plan year after the valuation date for such year (and any income allocable thereto) shall, for purposes of section 412(c)(7), be treated as assets in the plan as of the valuation date for the following year, and

"(B) the plan shall be treated as having a net experience loss under section 412(b)(2)(B)(iv) for the first plan year after the plan year in which such transfer occurs in an amount equal to the amount of such transfer (reduced by any amounts transferred back to the pension plan under subsection (c)(1)(B)), except that such section shall be applied to such amount by substituting '10 plan years' for '5 plan years'."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] will be recognized in opposition.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, for the first time in many years this Congress is being asked to do something meaningful about our Nation's budget deficit and national debt. Along with the President, we have resolved to make a $500 billion reduction in the deficit over 5 years. This measure before us tonight will accomplish that purpose. In the midst of all of the controversy surrounding these budget deliberations, this bill is a clear declaration of our firm intention to make meaningful reductions in spending as well as raise necessary revenue in order to achieve our goal.

As one of its goals, this bill intends that the burden of deficit reduction will be borne in a fair and equitable manner among taxpayers. In order to accomplish that goal and also to ensure the progressivity of the tax system, the plan contains a number of provisions aimed at allocating a larger share of deficit reduction to this Nation's wealthiest taxpayers. These include measures to burst the bubble, raise the individual minimum tax from 21 to 25 percent, and to impose a 10-percent surtax on individuals with taxable incomes over $1 million. By adopting these measures, we are ensuring those taxpayers most able to contribute in our effort to reduce the Federal budget deficit will do so.

It also should be noted that this bill does not include any increase in gasoline or petroleum taxes—even on home heating oil. This bill does not impose any limitation on itemized deductions. It does not extend the Medicare hospital insurance tax to additional State and local government workers.

Most important of all, the bill reduces the Medicare Program by only $43 billion, instead of the $60 billion cut originally proposed in the budget summit agreement. This measure will protect Medicare beneficiaries by keeping monthly premiums low and limiting the increase in the deductible. At most, the reduction in payments to providers will reduce the rate of growth in a program which is growing faster than any other portion of our Federal budget. It is not inappropriate for us to consider measures to control these costs.

It is also important to point out that this measure continues to offer special assistance for rural hospitals. Over the 5 years of this budget plan, Medicare will finally eliminate the unfair differential which causes rural hospitals to be paid less for the same services than urban hospitals. We cannot assure every rural hospital that this budget will assure its survival, but this budget gives them real hope for the future.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the only way we can make a real dent in the budget deficit is to take bold steps. It won't be easy, and it will require us all to make some tough decisions, but this Nation faces no more important problem than reducing the deficit. This situation scares the administration. It scares the Congress. But we must do something to deal with it.

I strongly urge passage of this alternative and this budget package, so that we can go to conference with the other body and work out a compromise that both Houses will agree to and that the President will sign.

Mr. Chairman, all America is looking at us today and the country expects action. A no vote means no budget. That is the long and the short of it.

We must do the responsible thing. America is already mad at us and they are going to be madder than an old wet hen if we do not do something today, and I think they are disgusted with what they see on television now.

Mr. Chairman, America expects us to pass a budget. We have that responsibility and we must act at this time.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, but I would like to begin by thanking the committee chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] and his Democrat colleagues for putting this amendment before the House today.

You see, I voted for the initial summit agreement because I felt that it was the best bipartisan budget we could hope for in this Chamber. I took a tremendous amount of criticism back home, more than on any issue in my career in the Congress; but thanks to this amendment, I feel completely vindicated. This alternative is actually far worse than anything I could ever have imagined. It is a textbook example of Democrat economic philosophy. Forget spending restraint. Just say, "yes" to taxes.

The Rostenkowski amendment calls for some $180 billion of new taxes and fees, borne mostly by middle income families, because the Democrats refuse to do what the American people want, and that is cut spending.

The Republicans were not even permitted to offer an alternative because the Democrats demanded that it include massive new taxes on the working people of America. We refused to do that.

The Democrats once again, Mr. Chairman, have been unable to curb their appetite for Government spending. What is wrong with putting the Federal Government on a spending diet that will press for reducing waste and encourage efficiency?

I believe the American people want and deserve that we as their Congressmen implement means to live within our income; but the Democrats have carefully attempted to seduce Americans into believing that the Rostenkowski proposal cuts the deficit just by taxing the rich. They masquerade behind a tax-the-rich mask, attempting to deceive the working people in America. Behind that mask, the stark reality exists that they raise tax rates, not just for the rich, but on all families with joint incomes over $19,000 a year. They cut the personal tax exemption on every person, child and adult.

Their plan is without a doubt a hit on all single and family households. I suggest that all Americans examine the table printed by the Democrats themselves to support their tax on low income and middle income working Americans. I do not call that a good deal for working Americans.

President Bush has said that if you raise the rates on the higher income people, soon they will work down to the lower income people. I do not think he realized that "soon" was "now" in the Democrat package.

Mr. Chairman, the great irony in all this is that the American people are not calling for tax increases. They want us to cut spending, and the Democrat leadership responds by refusing even to allow a vote on the Republican spending reduction alternative, with no new tax burden on working Americans.

□ 1810

Are they really that afraid to give the Members of this body a choice? As a matter of fact, I guess they should be, because the Democratic alternative actually massively increases spending over the next 5 years—$570 billion increase in entitlement spending, $180 billion increase in nondefense discretionary spending. That is a $750 billion increase in spending over the next 5 years while at the same time they increase American workers' taxes and fees by some $180 billion.

When this process started, I was truly hopeful we could achieve a bipartisan solution to the awful deficit problems plaguing this Nation. But that is not very likely at this time.

Here we go again, tax and spend. I urge a no vote.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN].

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank my chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, for yielding me this time.

Make no mistake about it, a vote for this particular amendment, the vote for reconciliation is a vote whether we are serious about reducing the deficit of this country.

It is not popular to vote for new taxes, it is not popular to vote for spending cuts. But we need to do it. I first want to congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], for he was the one who really got us on this path with the "Rosti challenge." It was the first effort made to make us serious about reducing the deficit. The Democrats have brought forward a specific program; the Republicans have not. Ours is a specific program that incorporates many of the principles that I think the American people support.

We do not hit the Social Security recipients; we should not, we have protected that. We have taken the Social Security trust fund off the Gramm-Rudman calculation. That is where it should be.

But we really speak to the issue of fairness.

I think that is the most important part about the Democratic alternative.

We speak to the Medicare system and proper cuts. Yes, there are cuts in Medicare, some $40 billion. But we speak to the principle that the elderly should not have to pay more than 25 percent of the cost of the program.

We are able to maintain that in the Democratic alternative.

We speak to how we should pay for the deficit, that all Americans should contribute their fair share, that the wealthy should not be left off but should be paying about the same percentage as everyone else. The Democratic alternative speaks to that.

Mr. Chairman, the alternative we have before us speaks to the issue of fairness but, most importantly, speaks to the issue of dealing with the deficit of this Nation.

The American people expect action. We have the opportunity today to do that by voting for this amendment and voting for the Reconciliation Act.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Republican leader of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I rise in strong opposition to the proposal offered by my good friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI]. The cold facts of politics put us on different sides of this issue, but my feelings of personal affection for him and my admiration for his ability remain as warm as ever.

What I have to say today is not directed at him. Instead, it is directed at a certain mood, an atmosphere that recently has been created by many of those in the majority. We cannot understand how really bad this proposal is unless we understand it in the context of that atmosphere.

In the last few weeks we have heard once again the ugly sound of economic McCarthyism. It bellows forth from the fever swamps of the left. It is the savage cry of class warfare.

To ordinary, middle-class Americans, that sound must be one of the most terrifying in the world. It is the sound of the liberals with their hands once again on the tax rates.

As the line from the horror movie goes, "Taxpayers, be afraid, be very afraid."

Let us just examine the most devastating tax increase contained in the package. The Democratic proposal reduces the tax benefits of the personal exemption by removing indexing for inflation. This will increase taxes on everyone except the wealthiest 1 million taxpayers in the country. This Democratic proposal brings back bracket creep with a vengeance, $5 billion, $6 billion, $7 billion.

Prior to the enactment fo the 1981 tax reduction bill, every taxpayer was subject to ever-increasing taxes through inflation. We stopped this in 1980, when we started indexing personal exemptions and tax brackets. By reversing this policy, Democrats would now return us to the silent rate increases for everyone.

The liberals have been telling us how much they want to sock it to the rich. It turns out their definition of rich is everyone who voted against Carter, Mondale, and Dukakis.

The policy of simply taxing the rich will not create one new job. But a policy that encourages savings and the accumulation of capital to invest in new entrepreneurial pursuits does create new jobs.

That is what we ought to be talking about here today.

And on the issue of fairness, the populists have been having a field day with their hot rhetoric, but when you cut through the well-orchestrated propaganda themes of the liberal Democrats, they are in fact simply calling for the redistribution of wealth.

Well, you cannot continually redistribute wealth if those who create it in the first place, with the sweat of their brows, are turned off from doing so because of bad tax policy.

Now, let me repeat a little bit of commonsense wisdom that all the deep thinkers in Washington appear to have forgotten:

The problem with the Federal deficit is not that the American people have been taxed too little but that those who run the Congress have been spending too much. It has been said that taxes are what we pay for civilized society. I agree. But excessive taxes are what the taxpayers pay for irresponsible congressional spending.

In the war against the deficit, the first strike, swift and hard, should be made against spending. That is the Republican way of doing things.

We tried compromise, and it failed. Both parties failed. Both leaderships failed. It is, in my view, a tragedy for this institution that the compromise could not be accepted.

So here we are with the stark contrast of party division unmistakably before us.

No Members on our side of the aisle should even consider voting for this plan. It is to budget deficit plans what Bart Simpson is to scholarship.

I would urge Members to vote down this proposition.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, this really is the toughest of issues that we face this week. There will be no greater issue that this Congress has to deal with. It is hard. You either cut spending dramatically or you raise revenues or you do some combination of both.

I do not think anybody is pleased with the choices that we are confronted with, not last week and not tonight.

The Republicans tried it this week, and they failed. They came up $100 billion short from what the President insisted upon. It is very, very difficult if you simply try to do it on the spending side or you simply try to do it on the revenue side.

This package is progressive. The minority leader is correct; it does ask more out of those at the upper end of the income scale to pay.

It is a fairer package than the one we voted on last week.

I hope that we can reach a bipartisan proposal. I hope we can keep this process moving and go to conference on this bill.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

□ 1820

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the Reagan revolution is dead. May it rest in peace. The idea that we could reduce the taxes for the wealthy, increase spending for the military, that we could have it all, is over. It has come crashing down during these weeks that we have wrestled with the problems of how to cut $500 billion from the deficit that the Reagan years brought us.

What the tax proposal of the Committee on Ways and Means attempts to do is very simple and clear. It says to the people who have benefited over the last 10 years, who have seen their real income increase 94 percent and their real tax rates go down 23 percent, "We want you to sacrifice a little so that the country as a whole could benefit."

Mr. Chairman, what have our Republican friends said? "Don't tax the wealthy. Cut spending."

Of course, when one asks, "Just what type of spending? Is it Medicare spending?"

"Oh, no, no, no. Don't touch that."

"Should we cut spending for student loans?"

"Well, maybe that's a good idea."

"What about spending for WIC mothers and the poor?"

"Well, that may or may not be a good idea."

Mr. Chairman, they hide behind the cloak of spending attempting to tell the mistruth that all spending is the same. It is not. And all taxes are not the same either.

What the package of the Committee on Ways and Means attempts to do is to tax the people who should be taxed and recognizes that a small break in the form of the capital gains reduction that we have should be vested in the middle class. It is a balanced proposal.

For 10 years we have attempted to get the public's attention about the basic unfairness of the Republican package, and George Bush has finally handed it to us. He has decided that he would rather see the Government of the United States shut down than to tax the wealthy.

Mr. Chairman, we have had enough. It is time for the wealthy to pay.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Democratic alternative to the omnibus budget reconciliation bill. It is billed as soak the rich, but under this proposal, American taxpayers from every income level will be subject to higher taxes. What's even worse is that this proposal will raise taxes more and more every year, without Congress having to vote on the increases. The Democratic proposal heralds the return of bracket creep, the silent thief who will quietly rob more and more Americans every year by forcing them into higher tax brackets due to inflation.

Don't let yourselves be fooled. This is not a tax-the-rich package, it's a tax-everybody-again-and-again package. If you are one of the fortunate Americans who receives a cost-of-living increase in your income, you may be surprised to find yourself pushed into a higher tax bracket. This could mean a 13-percent increase in taxes for Americans in the lowest tax bracket. In fact, the only Americans left unaffected by bracket creep are the 1 million richest Americans, who had their personal exemptions taken away in 1986. This tax increase would have the greatest impact on those Americans least able to afford it.

Tax increases will not reduce the deficit. In order to control the Federal deficit, Congress must control Federal spending. In order to control Federal spending, Congress must not raise taxes, Congress must reform the budget process, and Congress must repeal the congressional pay increase.

I urge my colleagues to reject the across-the-board tax increases proposed in the Democratic alternative.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, 10 years ago our great Nation was the world's largest creditor nation. We had over 140 billion dollars' worth of assets, and then in 1981 a new supply-side economics came into being, and we find ourselves today, just 10 years later, with some $600 billion of indebtedness, where the third largest item in our budget is just paying the interest on what we owe.

Mr. Chairman, people wonder why we still have to continue with this supply-side trickle-down theory. Is it not time that we thought about giving the American people a chance to get our homeless off the street? To supply jobs for the jobless? And give some hope for the hopeless?

It is not a question for Republicans and Democrats. It is a question as to whether this Congress is going to do what we were sent down here to do.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY].

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, the bill for the 1980's has come due. As we craft any budget package, there are two criteria that absolutely have to be met. No. 1: Are the cuts real? No. 2: Are the revenues fair?

Let me suggest to my friends that the package from the Committee on Ways and Means has real cuts. Ask any health care provider in any district. They are real cuts, and they get deeper and harder in the outyears.

Are our revenues fair? Let me suggest to my colleagues they are fairer than the present system. They are much fairer than the package that was agreed to by the summit that laid the burden on the middle class, the middle class who has seen a net reduction in income in the 1980's, an enormous increase in taxes.

Our package is crafted so that the burden is shared by all, most especially those that benefited most in the 1980's, not just the wealthy. In fact, the superrich.

It astounds me that my friends on the other side of the aisle can stand in the well hour after hour, speech after speech, saying that the rich and the superrich should not pay their fair share. Our proposal makes them pay that fair share.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I had truthfully hoped that this Congress could come together on a bipartisan agreement. Instead we now find ourselves with a Democrat proposal that has moved to the far left rather than toward the center. I think that is sad for the American people.

However, Mr. Chairman, the American people know which party is the party of higher taxes, and it is the Democrats.

Earlier this year, when the President entered negotiations to try to move this country ahead on a bipartisan budget effort, he extended his hand in cooperation to the majority in the Congress. It was a sincere effort on his part. But it was not long until the Democrat leadership went to the White House and threatened to withdraw from the negotiations unless there was a precondition that taxes were a part of the ultimate package. Perhaps the President should have not accepted that. But faced with the threat of a breakdown of the negotiations, he did in good faith. The President compromised in an effort to lead a split Congress. But the Democrat leadership dragged, and dragged, and dragged the negotiations until the eve of the election, where we stand today, all the while leaking information to the press for their political advantage. Now all that they have left is their clearly partisan proposal. Bipartisanship has left the table, and once again the Democrats, sadly enough, have resumed their role of the party of tax and spend.

I regret that, Mr. Chairman, but it is the reality of the debate in which we are engaged today.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MCCLOSKEY].

Mr. MCCLOSKEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the House Democratic alternative, and I commend Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI for his leadership.

Americans from every State, both parties, and every walk of life are increasingly aware President Bush's deficit reduction policies come down hardest on middle-class Americans and senior citizens.

As a Republican businessman told me today, "Break the Bubble. A 33 percent top rate is fine. We are asking a lot more from kids in the gulf."

Vote for fairness: for decency for Medicare recipients; for no additional delays in unemployment compensation; and for a 10-percent surtax on income over $1 million.

If the President shuts down the Government this weekend, Americans everywhere will know who he was trying to protect.

□ 1840

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. VOLKMER). The Chair would announce that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has 17 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS].

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, it is hypocritical and irresponsible of this Congress to consider any kind of increase in taxes. In the next few minutes I am going to illustrate just how hypocritical Congress has been. We are attempting to craft a budget that avoids the reality that we have enough revenues coming in from the taxpayers to meet our needs. We forget the fact that revenues have increased 33 percent in the last 7 years. We just need to set out spending priorities, cut waste, and not increase our overall spending.

Before raising taxes, it is time that the Congress take a hard look at cutting expenditures. This novel idea is always the last considered and most quickly ignored by this body. I think this is because the decision to cut the budget would require discipline and hard choices. However, Mr. Chairman, we were elected to this Chamber to make those kind of hard choices. We were sent here by the people to manage the affairs of Government responsibly and fairly.

I would bring to my colleagues' attention a series of votes that if they had been passed would have eased the current Federal budget crisis. Both Mr. FRENZEL and Mr. PENNY, Members from both sides of the aisle, have consistently and faithfully offered amendments to appropriation bills requesting that the Congress cut some of its runaway spending. However, every single, solitary amendment of this nature offered by these two distinguished Members was defeated.

Let me outline these votes:

[Dollars in millions]

Amendments	Percent of cut	Savings
Energy/Water (H.R. 5019):
Frenzel: Defeated: 98–314	11.4	$2,388

[1] In billions of dollars.

My colleagues, if we can't accept even these reasonable amendments how can we really be serious about a balanced budget or at least workable one. And these amendments are just a small sample of legislation where we could have made cuts.

Mr. FRENZEL's amendments to four different appropriation bills would have saved this country over $10 billion. Right there, Mr. Chairman, would have been an overwhelming savings. And, yet with all the concern of this body regarding the budget not one of Mr. FRENZEL's amendments passed. Not one.

Mr. PENNY's amendments suffered the same fate. Again, not one of those listed were passed.

In fact, just as a matter of absurdity and outrageous commentary on the inability of Congress to cut, Mr. WALKER offered an amendment to H.R. 5268, the Agriculture appropriations bill that would have cut 0.0000000002 percent from the bill. A savings, my colleagues, of a mere $19.90. However, this amendment was defeated 175 to 214.

These opportunities to cut expenditures, even a little, all met with overwhelming defeat. In light of this, how can we seriously approach the American people, asking them to believe us when we say we have worked hard to give them the best budget agreement possible? We've heard talk of increasing taxes. We've heard talk of raising the tax brackets. We have heard talk of more Government expansion. And yet, we almost never hear the still small voice of reason. Let us face it—the Government must curb its appetite. We must trim, cut, and do away with excessive costs. We must begin to practice the axiom that this Government must make do with what is necessary and not what is desirable. The answer, the simple solution, is to let the Republican budget plan be offered on the House floor. Our plan involves no new taxes and progrowth incentives for businesses. It involves cuts in waste and a partial freeze. Americans, the Republican Party should be allowed to present their budget package.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Democratic alternative for deficit reduction, and want to compliment the chairman and the fine work of his staff for quickly putting a package together which we on the Ways and Means Committee, and throughout this body, can be very proud.

The Democratic alternative is far superior to the budget summit agreement, and even the agreement as modified by the committee and reported out.

It is true that the Democratic alternative asks those who are significantly better off to contribute more to deficit reduction, but frankly, I do not think this is unfair. I believe we lost something of value in 1986 when we abandoned a good deal of the progressivity that was in the tax law, and I see the Democratic alternative as a modest step to regain that virtue.

The Democratic alternative meets our instructions to raise revenues and cut spending. And it does so in a real way. Yet the alternative eases the burden on middle America. And it eases the burden on our senior citizens as well, but not so much that they do not also contribute to this crucial effort to reduce the deficit.

The Democratic alternative also contains a capital gains reduction. Now, last year I voted against a capital gains reduction. I thought it went too far. But this year I am supporting this proposal. Why? Because it is fair. It is equitable. It is aimed at stimulating savings and investment by middle America—by our small business men and women, our farmers, and our homeowners. It is a good, solid proposal which I take pride in supporting.

I believe the Democratic alternative provides the vehicle with which we will enact significant deficit reduction. This will result in a far healthier economy than that which would exist if we were to fail with this endeavor. And so, Mr. Chairman, I urge all my colleagues to support this amendment, and to support this legislation on final passage.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I want to try to put all of this in some kind of perspective. As I listen to my constituents, they keep telling me, "I know America is in trouble. I know we have problems with our expenditures and our balance in Washington. I am ready and willing to do my part, if all of us will chip in."

Now, what we are talking about is a belt-tightening operation that will trim the Federal deficit by $500 billion over 5 years. That is what we need to keep our eye on.

There has been some discussion about this being an unbalanced budget. Let me give Members the facts, after all the figures are factored in.

For the lowest one-fifth of all our people, there is no increase in the burden that they have in their after-tax income. For the middle income, for the middle people in America, the middle one-fifth, there is only an eight-tenths of 1 percent increase in the burden after all of this is factored in. For the top one-fifth, there is only a 1.1 percent increase in their burden.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, well, here we are again, debating another budget package. Not that this package is any better. In fact, it is worse in many respects. The Democrats here are saying that their tax package will hit only the rich. Really? When I see the tax proposals being put forth on the House floor today, I see a disaster for the lower and middle income citizens of this country.

Taxing the rich? Do you call regressive excise taxes, which will hit senior citizens who live on fixed incomes, taxing the rich? Do you call the beginning of bracket creep taxing the rich? We need to be fair, but these regressive proposals are nothing but a new attack on the incomes of middle Americans.

We are looking at a slower economy, a declining trade position, and inflation. Raising taxes in the face of these trends will only make it worse. We do not need higher taxes. This Government already receives higher tax receipts than ever before. No, we need to control spending. We need to be serious about controlling this Government's appetite for more and more revenues to finance wasteful and unnecessary spending practices. Let's defeat this proposal, and get serious. Let us cut spending, and stop raising taxes on the backs of working Americans.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 18 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, we have heard three cries from our friends on the GOP side of the aisle this evening. The first is "class warfare." Well, most of the Members arguing for this against class warfare supported the summit 2 weeks ago. That was class warfare, except it was class warfare on the middle class. This Democratic alternative package is much more fair.

The second GOP cry is, "Don't touch the rates." Well, the people that are crying "Don't touch the rates" had no problem touching the rates when they were brought down from 70 to 50 percent and from 50 to 28. It was okay to touch the rates then, to cut them in half or more than half.

And why not raise rates? If we need revenue, raising rates is a lot more fair than raising excise taxes. And that is the choice between the Democratic alternatives and the other packages we have seen.

The third cry is, "Don't tax at all." But when Federal expenses exceed revenue, then the choice is not taxes, yes or no. It is taxing versus borrowing. Borrowing is the worse option, far worse. It puts our children in debt, whereas taxes are a decision to pay as you go.

So forget these hollow rallying cries of "class warfare," "don't touch rates," and "don't tax at all," They appeal superficially but mislead and deceive.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, as one of the 71 Republicans who cast the tough vote for the budget summit agreement that went down in flames early in the morning on October 5, 1990, I will vote for the Rostenkowski substitute.

I took to the floor early in the morning on October 5 and again on October 8 and I said, I know this budget agreement is not perfect, there are problems with home heating oil, there are problems with Medicare, there are problems with the bubble, but let the process move forward and let the committees do their work, to try to improve the package.

So now, the committees have gone to work and produced their legislation to carry out the terms of the agreement we approved on October 8.

Home heating oil is exempt. In fact, the Rostenkowski amendment removes all new gasoline and petroleum taxes.

This reconciliation bill greatly lessens the hit on beneficiaries of Medicare. Premiums will stay at 25 percent of the cost. The deductible will go to $100 and no further. Reductions affecting beneficiaries have been reduced from $30 billion in the original summit package down to $10 billion, still significant, but much less that where we started.

The Rostenkowski amendment will burst the bubble and raise the hit in taxes on those most able to withstand it, the 1 percent of American taxpayers who have the highest income.

This is not to say there are no problems remaining with this package.

The Rostenkowski amendment will delay indexing of tax brackets and exemptions for a year, and that will affect all taxpayers.

And I have never been a big fan of granting tax breaks in a deficit reduction bill, and the Rostenkowski amendment will provide a limited capital gains break.

The other problem is that apparently Merchant Marine is about to get away with not enacting a Coast Guard user fee once again. It's the same old play—they've reported a tax, the tonnage tax, that will be struck on a point of order, and no attempt will be made to try to replace it with the user fee. That bites the big one.

As I weigh the alternatives, I want everyone to understand where I am coming from. Since May 15, I have labored as part of the budget summit and as a Member of this body, to come up with a deficit reduction package that will save $500 billion over 5 years. I believe we have a responsibility to address the deficit. I believe we have a responsibility to govern.

What happened this morning, with the denial of the opportunity to Republicans to offer their alternative, was a travesty. It should not happen in this body. The temptation is so very great to walk away from this process. But if I do, and if we do not enact a deficit reduction package, I fear the consequences will be far worse on the economy and on each and every American.

So I will vote to move the process forward one more step, and reserve my vote on passage of any conference report on this bill, depending on how many of the improvements are retained and how many of the problems resolved.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. SILVIO, SILVIO, our beloved bard of the House, a lonely Republican stuck up there with 10 other liberal Democrats in Massachusetts. You are going to be liberated soon to rejoin your Republican family here. There is a rap, rap, rapping at the door for a conservative Republican to go to the Senate, or a conservative Democrat or conservative Republican for the Governor's chair. All you people from Taxachusetts and all other liberal bastions around this country act like all spending in government, all spending is mother's milk for starving children. But here is just a sample list that I will run down from the 1990 budget:

A grant of $19 million to study methane from cattle as it relates to global warming. You know which end of the cow the methane gas comes out; $500,000 for timber bridge research; $1.5 million for Stuttgart, AR, fish farming experimental station; $3 million for Long Beach parking facility; $9 million for juvenile fish bypass facilities on the Columbia and Snake Rivers; $200,000 for research on fire resistant shrubs and grass; $166,000 for a mountain bike trail; $1 million for an Oregon aquarium; $250,000 for study of the pintail duck population; $300,000 for arctic goose studies; and $300,000 for joint U.S.-U.S.S.R. walrus study.

Here is some 1989 pork:

A grant of $150,000 for pea and lentil research; $942,000 for fish oil research; $700,000 to count trees, shrubs, and ornamental flowers; $3 million for leafy spurge and knapweed control; $6 million to repair tracks for a private railroad; and $41.8 million for anadromous fish studies and hatcheries.

Here is some 1988 pork:

A grant of $3 million for 3 parking garages in southwest Chicago; $6.4 million for a Bavarian-style ski resort in Idaho; $750,000 for fishing gear entanglement research; $5 million for Ted Turner's Goodwill Games. How the heck did I let that one get by me?

A grant of $3.1 million to convert a Baltimore ferry boat into a crab restaurant—beautiful; $170,000 to fund a Dunkin' Donuts store; and $11 million to construct a harbor for private pleasure boats in Cleveland. Whose district was that?

Here is some miscellaneous pork:

A grant of $84,000 for a study of why people fall in love; $2,500 to investigate the causes of rudeness, lying, and cheating on tennis courts; $46,000 to determine how long it takes to cook breakfast eggs; and $6,000 to determine the effects of marijuana smoking on scuba divers' ability to withstand cold temperatures.

Pork, pork, pork, and more pork.

Mr. Chairman, the latest tax-increase scheme from the Democrats contains a huge tax increase on the middle class that the Democrats hope to hide. This is how the Wall Street Journal described it yesterday.

Although the House Democrats are selling their alternative as one that soaks the rich, it does include one provision that would hit the middle-class hard: a one-year delay in the scheduled inflation adjustments in income-tax brackets and to the personal exemption, which exempts from taxes $2,050 of income for each member of a taxpayer's family. This hard-to-notice tax increase supplanted a much more visible—and politically touchy—tax rise on motor fuels.

No wonder the liberal Democrats want to hide this huge tax hike. It will cost a family of four earning $34,000 an additional $313 a year. And I don't know about your district, Mr. Chairman, but in my district that is not a wealthy family.

Mr. Speaker, I want the American middle class to know the dirty little secret the Democrats will not tell them. And that is there are simply not enough rich people from which to raise the type of tax revenues the liberal Democrats are talking about. That means, Mr. and Mrs. Middle Class, the Democrats are coming after you, in the cover of night. So hold onto your wallets.

If the current Democratic obsession with raising taxes—and it is an obsession—has illustrated anything it is that the liberal Democrats are more responsive to the special interests than to the average voter. That is why not one special interest or corporate welfare program termination has been included in the Democratic reconciliation package. Not one. As far as the Democrats are concerned, the Federal bureaucracy is immortal.

That means the Democrats are asking middle class Americans to pay more in taxes each year so that they can continue funding programs such as these, contained in the 1990 budget.

A grant of $19 million to study methane from cattle as it relates to global warming. Of course, you know which end of the cow produces the methane;

A grant of $500,000 for timber bridge research;

A grant of $1.5 million for a Stuttgart, AR, fishing farming experimental station;

A grant of $3 million for a Long Beach parking facility;

A grant of $9 million for juvenile fish bypass facilities on the Columbia and Snake Rivers;

A grant of $1 million for an Oregon aquarium;

A grant of $300,000 for an arctic goose studies; and

A grant of $250,000 for a study of the pintail duck population

The list goes on and on and on and on, ad navseum, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps the taxpayers should feel fortunate that they aren't still funding pea and lentil research or leafy spurge and knapweed control or providing Playboy in braille. But I don't think they will.

The fact is that this reconciliation package refuses to recognize the simple truth of the budget process: There is no need to raise taxes to balance budget. All that is needed is to reduce the growth, the growth of Federal spending and terminate special interrest and corporate welfare programs that have either outlived their original purposes or do not provide a vital national need—such as the National Endowment of the Arts. In the case of the NEA grants the freedom to occasionally fund pornographic of blasphemous suedo-art was more important than fiscal integrity.

We have heard a lot from the class-warfare crowd on the left about how the rich have received huge tax breaks under two Republican Presidents. The class warfarists therefore propose that to solve the budget deficit the rich must start paying their fair share.

Mr. Chairman, I and several of my colleagues have tried to cut through this Democrat-induced fog to explain this simple truth to the American people. The most recent IRS statistics show that from 1979, Jimmy Carter's second to last year in office, up through 1988, Ronald Reagan's last year in office, the percentage of total taxes paid by the rich has increased while the percentage of taxes paid by average Americans has decreased. Let me repeat. From 1979 to 1988 the percentage of taxes paid by the wealthiest Americans has increased—substantially—while the percentage of taxes paid by the middle and lower classes has decreased, that is, gone down, down!

This, of course, is what supply-side economists predicted would happen when tax rates were cut. In other words, the Laffer curve, which postulated that lower tax rates would increase tax revenue, has been vindicated. Under Ronald Reagan the gross national product grew by nearly 80 percent. Uncle Sam's slice of the pie was smaller, but the pie was so much bigger that it more than made up for the difference. Again, that was what the supply-siders said would happen. The table below illustrates this clearly.

Adjusted gross income class	Percent of taxes paid		Percent change
	1979	1988
Highest 5 percent	37.6	45.9	+8.3
Highest 10 percent	49.5	56.9	+7.4
Highest 25 percent	73.1	77.8	+4.7
Highest 50 percent	93.2	94.5	+1.3
Lowest 50 percent	6.8	5.5	−1.3
Lowest 25 percent	0.5	0.6	+0.1
Lowest 10 percent	[1]	[1]	[1]

The Democrats need to ask themselves, what is the purpose of tax policy? Is it to show how tough we are on the rich? Or is it to raise revenue? They know their tax increases on the rich will not raise any additional revenue. Indeed, I venture to estimate that liberals, if they have their way, will actually decrease revenues for two reasons. First, people will find ways to avoid paying the taxes—these liberals know well that all millionaires have tax lawyers and tax accountants by the corporate jet load—and second, the proposed taxes will have a negative effect on the economy, which in turn will lower revenues, repeat lower the tax intake. Liberals know this, and know it well; besides a deep recession is the only hope the liberal Democrats have of a shot at taking the White House. Sad but true.

Mr. Chairman, this Member has had enough of the class warfare, socialist rhetoric emanating from the liberal Democrats. Their reconciliation package is the product of the tax and spend socialism that has become the hallmark of modern Democratic liberalism, and by modern I mean for over 50 years. It is simply a phoney soak-the-rich scheme that is meant more to make the left feel good about itself than an honest effort to balance the budget without driving our economy into a recession. And if this package passes, Mr. Chairman, that is where we are headed—for recession. And we can surely call it the Rostenkowski recession.

Mr. Chairman, shutting the Government down would not be the worst thing to happen to this country. Indeed, I submit that there are several parts of the Government which should be shut down permanently. The tax increase proposed by the Socialist Democrats would be far worse for the country than a short Government shut down. And I just wish the Socialist Democrats had as much sympathy for the average working American as it does for the bureaucracy.

I therefore urge all my colleagues to vote "nay" on what we Republicans think of as the Democrat's Recession Promotion Act.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, there is never an easy package and there is a great deal of exaggeration always from partisans on both sides. Sometimes we forget how much that we have that is identical.

In this particular package of $500 billion, 75 percent to 80 percent of the package is identical from both sides of the aisle.

When the summit was started and the President insisted, as he should have done so, that there be a total of $500 billion in a combination of spending cuts and revenue increases over the next 5 years, this summit group did a good job in putting together a tremendous package with 75 percent to 80 percent of it agreed upon, and that is what Members are voting on today. There was about 20 percent that was in disagreement.

That 20 percent really is what the debate should focus upon. A majority of the Democrats, together with a majority of the Republicans, said that 12 cents a gallon in gasoline tax and 2 cents a gallon home heating oil was unacceptable. We ought to change that, and the Ways and Means Committee agreed and did change the 12 cents a gallon and eliminated it, and did agree that 2 cents on home heating oil should not be there, and did change it.

The summit package made an impact upon Medicare recipients of some $60 billion. A majority of the Republicans here in this body together with a majority of the Democrats said that that is too great an impact upon the senior citizens, and the Ways and Means Committee, taking that direction from both the Republican side and the majority, together with a majority of the Democrats decreased that so that the Medicare recipients do not have that impact.

Now obviously if you are going to take the hit from the Medicare recipients, if you are going to eliminate the 12-cents-a-gallon gasoline tax, you have to put it somewhere, and the Ways and Means Committee did that. I think it is a balanced program and we ought to support it.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, we have been told that this is a balanced bill, that the taxing provisions are good. Some of our friends on the Democrat side have said they are proud to vote for this bill, and that is a good thing. If they vote for it they ought to be proud of it.

I wonder, however, if they are aware that after we get through the roughly $70 billion that is assessed to high income earners, there is another half of the tax bill, particularly that half in the suspension of indexation, an item of $36 billion that falls very heavily on the middle income taxpayer, and even on the poor.

There are other portions as well, including some of the sales and excise taxes that we know about.

Earlier in the day I showed that over spending of discretionary spending in 1990 this reconciliation bill and budget resolution provides for $180 billion of new spending, grossly above the baseline. We can compare it with the tax portion of the bill which nets to about $160 billion.

That $160 billion figure is particularly interesting because I think it is the second largest tax increase in the history of the civilized and the uncivilized world, although I have not consulted Guinness on this subject. It is also interesting that it is a little less than necessary to pay for the increases in domestic discretionary in this very bill.

So as Members think about taxing rich people, remember, we have not even funded the extra spending that is in discretionary for the next 5 years that we have agreed to and, therefore, Members can be pretty sure that those under the highest incomes will be next. Does America want this kind of a bill? I do not think so.

I will vote no.

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in very reluctant support of this budget reconciliation bill.

This bill is far from perfect. We should have cut waste more, cut the military budget more, protected the elderly better, and raised taxes less.

But this budget is an enormous improvement over the inequitable and unacceptable budget summit agreement, and far preferable to sequestration.

If we fail to enact a budget this week, not only will the Government shut down, but we will invite a crippling recession that will severely harm American families.

Several weeks ago, the President and congressional leaders brought to this body a different plan for reducing the deficit—a plan that placed an unfair share of the burden of deficit reduction on the backs of the middle class and the elderly. That plan was totally unacceptable, and I joined my colleagues in voting to defeat it.

Congress then instructed its committees to craft an alternative plan that would share the painful and difficult burden of deficit reduction more equitably. These committees have now worked their will, and the result is a significant improvement over the budget summit agreement.

I have long felt that it is inappropriate to increase taxes until we move aggressively to eliminate waste, fraud and abuse in Government spending. But if the President and congressional leaders insist on tax increases at this stage, then those increases must not fall unfairly on the backs of the poor and the middle class. Those increases must be fair and equitable. This budget alternative respects that fundamental principle.

This budget plan does not place an excessive new tax burden on the backs of middle-class Americans, who already pay more than their fair share of taxes. It abandons proposals for increased taxes on home heating oil, which would have dealt a devastating blow to family budgets in the Northeast. It abandons proposals for increased taxes on gasoline at a time when gasoline prices are already rising. It abandons damaging new tax loopholes that broke faith with the concept of tax reform. And it abandons a mean-hearted proposal to limit unemployment benefits.

In short, this budget proposal, though not perfect, is a dramatic improvement over the one proposed by the President and congressional leaders.

Nevertheless, we need to do more to cut waste, fraud and abuse in the Federal Government before we resort to higher taxes on any Americans. The $800 toilet seats at the Pentagon, the influence-peddling at HUD, the boondoggle of farm subsidies for wealthy agribusiness, and the shameful savings and loan debacle are proof that waste and fraud are still forcing up the cost of Government. We have not acted forcefully or quickly enough in cutting out waste and fraud, jailing criminals who abuse the taxpayers' trust, and using their seized assets to recover some of the costs of these tragic episodes.

In addition, I remain convinced that significant additional reductions can be made in our Nation's military budget without harming our national security. Such savings could be used to lessen the impact of cuts in Medicare or tax increases in this package.

In failing to cut the military budget substantially, we are abandoning an historic opportunity to reorder our Nation's priorities in light of the end of the cold war. Yesterday, Mikhail Gorbachev was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in recognition of the dramatic changes he has brought about in East-West relations. But today, we continue massive spending as if there had not been any changes in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, spending on such wasteful weapons systems as star wars, the MX missile, the Trident II missile, and others.

We must remain strong, and we must be able to respond quickly and effectively to regional crisis. But now is the time to acknowledge that continued massive spending on nuclear weapons is not in our Nation's best interests. Now is the time to acknowledge that our allies must bear their fair share of the burden of defending freedom around the globe. They must anteup, or we will go belly up.

And although the Medicare cuts are significantly reduced in comparison to those proposed by the budget summit agreement, I still feel that too much of the burden of deficit redution is placed on the backs of this Nation's elderly residents. We cannot continue to pile cost upon cost for our Nation's elderly citizens, and I object strenuously to the fact that Medicare beneficiaries continue to bear an inordinate share of the deficit reduction burden.

Finally, I must express my opposition to the cuts in veterans benefits which are contained in this budget. Our Nation's veterans, who have given so much to protect our freedom, deserve fairness from the Federal Government. We should not even consider further cuts in veterans entitlements.

I would not have drafted a budget plan such as the one that was arrived at by congressional leaders and the President. And this new plan could be substantially improved as well.

But if we do not pass a budget this week, we risk catastrophic consequences for our Nation and for our economy. The result will be a second Government shutdown, followed by massive across-the-board spending cuts in most Government programs, from crime prevention and antidrug efforts to social security and medicare * * * from education to pollution control * * * from housing to air traffic control. There is no question that the consequences, even in the short-term, will be devastating.

But that will only be the prelude. For if we fail to approve a deficit reduction package, we will have committed a crime against our Nation's economy. We will have aided and abetted an economic downturn. A fragile economy will be sent into a nosedive.

There are moments in our Nation's history when issues of overriding importance arise that must be addressed if we hope to move forward as a Nation. Such is the case today with the Federal deficit. Even as we speak, the economic storm clouds are gathering. The long-feared recession is already a reality in many parts of the Nation. It has certainly hit my district in New York, where layoffs are more and more frequent, and the downturn in the local economy is an unfortunate fact of life.

Unless this Congress and this President can approve a reasonable and fair plan to reduce the deficit, we will not only risk a second shutdown of the Federal Government and the loss of essential services that our citizens take for granted, but we will invite a severe economic downturn in this Nation in the months and years ahead.

Of course this plan could be better. Of course some Americans will suffer. But the very future of our economy hangs in the balance. If we hope to revitalize our economy and restore our competitiveness as a Nation * * * if we hope to achieve a secure and prosperous future for ourselves and our children * * * then we must do what we know is right: We must act now to reduce the deficit.

Today, let us put partisan bickering aside and vote for the best product that compromise could devise. Let us get on with the business of deficit reduction, or rebuilding our economy, and of increasing opportunity for all American citizens. This is not the best budget we can produce, but it is the best yet, and we have a responsibility to approve it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the alternative Democratic budget. Two weeks ago, the President asked Americans to support the budget summit agreement. It would have cut the budget deficit by $500 billion over 5 years. And how would this goal be achieved? By spending cuts that hurt those with no voice in the back rooms of the White House: the poor, the elderly, the infirm. By regressive measures that would raise the taxes of the poor by 11 percent and the middle class by 3.3 percent, but that would leave untouched the lower tax rate for the rich. And by giving a trim instead of a crew cut to defense spending.

Well, Americans are a generous people. They are willing to make personal sacrifices for the good of their country. But they are not naive. Their sense of fairness is as great as their sense of patriotic duty. And one thing they will not do is bear the burden of deficit reduction while the most privileged get off scot free. So they rejected the summit budget, and urged us in Congress to do the same. Most of us did, believing that the goal of deficit reduction does not give us the right to burden those who are already down.

The Democratic alternative reduces the deficit as much as the President wants. But it achieves the goal more fairly. Medicare cuts are reduced by $7 billion. Oil and gas excise taxes are eliminated. And income tax rates for the wealthiest Americans are modestly increased to reflect their greater ability to contribute to our country's pressing needs.

The time has come to end the borrow and spend Reaganomics that have allowed the rich to play while the rest pay. The Democratic budget puts a stop to tax giveaways for the privileged, and marks a return to tax fairness.

Two weeks ago, the President asked Americans to support his budget. Tonight they asked him to support theirs. I hope he will not let them down.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the Democratic alternative tc the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act.

Democrats have fought this budget battle on principles, not politics. In the face of Republican threats, delays and posturing, House Democrats have come up with a budget that stands for tax fairness, not tax relief for the rich.

The Democratic alternative achieves real deficit reduction that will get this Nation back on the road to fiscal soundness. It represents the Democrats' commitment to ensuring that no one particular group—whether it's working Americans or retirees—should have to shoulder more than his or her fair share. It still requires hard choices and sacrifices from all Americans, but in a manner that is evenhanded and equitable.

The Democratic alternative also reaffirms the Democrats' commitment to achieve tax fairness. By eliminating the bubble, it corrects one of the great injustices of our tax system, whereby wealthier citizens pay a lower marginal rate than middle-income citizens. The Democratic plan asks wealthier Americans to pay their fair share, to make the same sacrifices asked of other Americans.

Attaining the level of deficit reduction contained in this budget alternative was not easy because it calls for real spending cuts and revenue increases. But it achieves this deficit reduction fairly in a way that will ultimately benefit the Nation and the American people. It means we avert the shutdown of the Government and the devastating impact of deep, across-the-board cuts brought about by sequestration.

President Bush quipped to the press that the Congress should come up with a budget. The Congress has produced one which meets his criteria of $500 billion in deficit reduction through spending cuts and tax increases. We have a budget; now it is time for the President to support the budget which he chided us to develop. We've made the tough choices and now it's time for the President to join us in supporting this balanced package.

The Democratic alternative demonstrates our resolve to reduce the deficit in a manner that will pass muster with the American people. The time for posturing is gone. We have a truly balanced budget before us which I urge all of my colleagues to support.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my unequivocal support for the budget amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I have waited for this day, when we finally confront what has been simmering for a long time, the clear distinction between the Democratic Party's call for tax fairness and the Republicans obsessive ideological rigidity in preserving tax advantages for the wealthy in the name of preserving the supply side experiment.

I stood in the House well 10 years ago and joined 95 other far-sighted members in voting against the so-called Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. I opposed the 1981 cuts because I believed it would lead to a less equal society, and it has. In fact, this single act represents the most radical redistribution of income away from moderate income households to the wealthy in the Nation's history. We are here today, in part, to begin to correct the excesses which the 1981 tax cuts put in motion. Between 1982 and 1990, the 1981 tax cuts have cost the Federal Treasury over $1.7 trillion, and today we must wake-up every morning and borrow close to $700 million from our wealthiest competitors just to pay the interest on our outstanding debt, which has tripled since the 1981 tax cut frenzy.

The results of the Nation's economy and family budgets speak for themselves: Nine out of ten American families paid more Federal taxes; average hourly wages for working men and women fell 9.3 percent; the incomes of the richest 20 percent of American families grew eight times faster than the income growth of the remaining 80 percent; an average, two-parent family paid out 23.7 percent of their $32,000 median income in 1980 and 24.1 percent in 1990; Americans making $182,000 or more saw their Federal tax burden fall in the same time period from 28.9 percent to 25.7 percent. This has been the sad story of the 1980's on budget and tax policies.

Today, we are moving forward on a budget designed to ensure fairness in our tax system and at the same time, to achieve serious deficit reduction that is significant and real. We are facing deficit reduction head-on without burdening working Americans with regressive taxes, without draconian cuts which could throw the already sluggish economy into a recession, and in a way that still leaves a large peace dividend which can be reinvested in much-needed new public investment.

The Democratic alternative recognizes that older Americans should not be asked to pay more than their fair share by preventing substantial hikes in Medicare deductibles, premiums, and copayments. Compared to the original summit agreement, the burden on Medicare beneficiaries is reduced by nearly one-half to two-thirds.

The Democratic proposal drops gasoline excise tax increases as well as taxes on home heating oil. It deletes the administration's mean-spirited plan to have a 2-week waiting period to collect unemployment compensation.

To increase the progressivity of our Tax Code, the Ways and Means alternative eliminates the bubble by creating an explicit 33 percent tax rate bracket; increases the individual minimum tax from 21 percent to 25 percent; imposes a 10-percent surtax on individuals with taxable incomes in excess of $1 million; and finally, increases the health insurance wage cap up to $100,000 rather than the current ceiling of $53,000.

The Democractic alternative puts an end to the false notion that only wealthy Americans are able and willing to help the economy grow. I have far greater confidence in middle-income families and this proposal embodies that confidence by including savings and investment incentives to small businessmen, farmers, and small investors who truly fuel our economy.

The single most important thing that any Government official can do to restore public confidence is to put Government back on the side of average working families in this country by seeing to it that our deficit is reduced quickly and fairly. Enactment of today's Democratic alternative will be a major step forward to achieving this goal. We will be able to look the American people in the eye and say that we have governed responsibly and fairly in the Nation's interest.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, our Nation is teetering on the brink of recession. The American people ask us to act and act now to put our house in order.

The alternative to our passing a deficit reduction measure is sequestration—a larger across-the-board cut which will fall heavily on the less advantaged. For me this is far too draconian.

A $500 billion deficit reduction package is what we all want and what America needs. It should help avoid a recession. We should expect interest rates to come down which will benefit all Americans.

No $500 billion deficit reduction can be realized without sacrifice. What is important is that it be achieved fairly and equitably.

The amendment before us would help reduce the deficit by a luxury tax, a new tax rate on high income, and a surtax on the very wealthy.

It meets our objectives without touching Social Security. No change is made in taxes on gasoline or on heating oil.

The hit on Medicare beneficiaries is modest and without any loss in benefits. This proposal is worthy of us.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Democratic alternative to the budget reconciliation bill.

The Democratic plan will cut $500 billion off the deficit in 5 years. It is not painless, but it is fairer by far than any of the other proposals that have been made. The alternatives to it are inaction—which is irresponsible—or huge cuts in Medicare and Social Security—which are unconscionable.

Unlike the so-called "budget summit" proposal endorsed by the President and which I voted against, the Democratic bill does not raise the taxes of middle income people and let the wealthy off scot-free; it does not cut Medicare and let the Pentagon off scot-free; it does not tax gasoline and heating oil, and let the oil industry off scot-free.

Instead, it places the primary burden of reducing the deficit on those who received the greatest benefits from the misplaced priorities and misguided policies of the past decade. Under this plan, that primary burden is placed on those making more than $200,000 a year; under the summit proposal, that burden fell most harshly on older Americans and families making between $20,000 and $30,000 a year.

Is this a perfect proposal? Of course not. The fact is that our budget situation is so bad that there are no easy answers, no painless solutions. But if we're ever doing to dig ourselves out of the economic hole we're in, we've got to begin by cutting the deficit.

It is obvious from the events of the past few weeks that the President has neither the courage nor a plan, to reduce the deficit fairly or responsibly. Those representing the President's party in this House were offered a chance to develop their own proposal; and the majority looked deep down into their own souls and came up with nothing.

Let us not forget that the President and the Republicans entered the budget negotiations months ago with a proposal to reduce the taxes of the rich, cut Medicare and Social Security by $120 billion, and leave defense spending alone.

In other words, they have been asking us all year to respond to the mistakes of the past decade by making those mistakes all over again.

Well, I think the American people deserve better than that. Older Americans deserve more dignity and security than that. Taxpayers deserve more fairness than that. And our children deserve more backbone and vision from their leaders than that.

A vote for the Democratic proposal is a vote to end once and for all the trickle-down, voodoo economic, supply-side, Reagan-Bush-Quayle-Sununu, let-them-eat-cake, help the big guy and to heck with the little guy arrogance that has bankrupted our country and led us through a decade of self-indulgence to the brink of economic catastrophe.

A vote for the Democratic plan is a vote that says no to policies that have resulted in the largest transfer of wealth from poor and middle-income families to the rich in the history of our Nation.

A vote for the Democratic plan is a vote to end the gutless dithering and blithering both in the White House and on Capitol Hill that has transformed America from the world's largest creditor to the world's largest debtor in less than a decade.

Finally, a vote for this bill is a vote to take the first step back from economic collapse and the first step toward economic recovery.

Our vote today marks the beginning of what must be a long-term struggle to reverse the mistakes of the past 10 years; to reclaim our Nation's independence from foreign creditors; to reinvest in our Nation's future; to restore optimism to our young and peace of mind to our old; and to recreate throughout our system of government the basic sense of decency and fair play that has long characterized American democracy.

If we truly want a kinder, gentler America; not to mention a more solvent and equitable America; we must adopt the Democratic budget plan today.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Chairman, it has certainly taken a long time, and we are not out of the woods yet by any stretch of the imagination, but at last we are finally operating in a more sensible and responsible manner here today.

We have finally slammed the door on the misconceived budget summit approach to solving our deficit problems. Rather than being presented with a take-it-or-leave-it package that gouges senior citizens, the unemployed, and low and middle income working families, we have before us a proposal that individual Members of Congress have had a hand in drafting.

While we still quarrel over specific items in this new plan, and while I am sure that this plan is not exactly what any one of us would have drafted on our own, it is nevertheless a proposal developed by the Congress and not by an oligarchy of the President and congressional leadership.

No less important, Mr. Chairman, the options we have before us today offer us a much clearer choice on one of the most fundamental philosophical questions before this country. Are we going to continue the failed policies of the 1980's—the failed policies under which the wealthy have been given a free ride, the failed policies under which this Government has told the richest Americans that they have no obligation to fairly share in the burdens of addressing the needs of their fellow citizens and the nation, the failed policies under which the gap between the wealthiest and the poorest has become a yawning chasm into which middle income citizens are fast disappearing?

Or, are we instead going to finally stand up and say enough is enough? The cold, hard truth is that in the 1980's we lost sight of what this country is supported to be all about. Somehow too many people forgot some of the most important principles we are supposed to represent as a nation and as a society.

Today, however, we have the opportunity to restore some balance to the system. We have the opportunity to tell the American people that things do not have to continue on this way.

Mr. Chairman, once we put aside all of the numbers we have been debating, we ultimately come down to confronting one basic philosophical question. It is a question we have put off answering for too long, but at least it is not too late.

I know how I will answer the question. I plan to vote for the Democratic alternative to the budget. It is fair, it gets the job done, and it turns us away from the disastrous path our Nation is careening down.

Having said all that, however, I must point out to my colleagues, and particularly to the American people, that we are all living in a fool's paradise if we think thay any of these budget packages are really going to bring the deficit down as much as they suggest. They simply cannot, and they will not.

All these packages are based on fundamentally flawed economic assumptions about what is going to happen next year and over the next 5 years. They are based on unrealistically optimistic assumptions about interest rates, unemployment, and the future of our economy.

I am convinced that our economic problems are more serious than either the President or the leadership have acknowledged, and that none of the proposals which have been made will actually reduce the deficit as much as they claim.

I predict that in less than a year we will be back where we are today; considering further legislation to cut the deficit because the recession we are now entering has played havoc with our economic assumptions.

The President and the budget summiteers predict that budget cuts of this magnitude will reduce inflation from 5.2 percent in 1990 to 4.6 percent in 1991 and 2.8 percent in 1995. They further predict that the interest rate on 91-day Treasury bills will drop from 7.7 percent this year to 7.2 percent next year and 4.2 percent in 1995, and that real GNP growth will be .7 percent in 1990, 1.3 percent in 1991 and 3.5 percent in 1995.

I have a nice piece of swampland in Florida I would like to sell to anyone who believes these predictions are accurate.

One only has to look at the impact of the recent increase in energy prices to recognize that these assumptions are unrealistic. If the August inflation figures are any indicator, next year's inflation rate will sour to double digits, not go down.

Unemployment is also expected to increase as the recession deepens. This will further increase spending, decrease revenues, and increase the deficit.

The consensus of a blue chip group of private sector economists is that these economic assumptions for 1995 underestimate inflation by 40 percent, underestimate Treasury interest rates by 62 percent, and overestimate real GNP growth by 35 percent.

We are kidding ourselves and misleading the American public if we do not make it crystal clear that the economic assumptions underpinning all these proposals are what we hope will happen, but not necessarily what is likely to happen. The data of the private sector economists suggests that these wishes will not become reality.

Nonetheless, the fact that this and other budget packages are based on rosy estimates of our economic situation should not paralyze us. Our deficit problems are so great that we must start work on them today. Every day we delay acting only costs us hundreds of millions of dollars in additional interest costs. Furthermore, even for the Federal Government, $500 billion in deficit reduction is real money.

I outlined the package I would have preferred to have voted for on October 4, 1990, when we considered the first budget summit package. My package would have cut foreign aid and unnecessary subsidy programs more, and would not have cut Medicare or unemployment benefits. My package would have imposed taxes on the windfall profits of the multinational oil companies, instead of middle-class taxpayers.

The Democratic alternative package we consider today does not adopt all of the recommendations I made on October 4, 1990. But it does adopt many of these recommendations and it is a substantial improvement over the first summit package prepared by the President and the leadership.

Among the major improvements of the Democratic package over the earlier package are:

The new Democratic package eliminates the major increase in Medicare premiums contained in the President's original budget package. It also reduces by two-thirds the increase in the Medicare deductible. As a result, this package, unlike the one the President urged us to adopt a week ago, has the support of the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, the National Council of Senior Citizens, the Seniors Coalition, and the Save Our Security Coalition. The American Association of Retired Persons calls this "a fair and effective proposal."

The new Democratic package eliminates the 2-week waiting period for unemployment benefits contained in the President's endorsed budget package. A 2-week wait would have been a cruel trick to play on the families of American workers when we are heading into a recession.

The new Democratic package eliminates the regressive 12-cent-per-gallon increases in the gas tax and the 2-cent-per-gallon tax on home heating oil contained in the President's original summit package. These tax increases would have hit low and middle income families hardest.

The new package increases taxes primarily on those who have an ability to pay, rather than on average working families. The President's original package would have turned the tax code upside down. Low and middle income taxpayers would have born the brunt of the tax increase under the President's package, while the affluent would have escaped virtually scot-free. The following chart demonstrates how much more progressive the new Democratic alternative is than either the President's original budget package or the plan adopted by the Senate Finance Committee:

PERCENT CHANGES IN FEDERAL TAXES BY INCOME

Adjusted gross income (in thousands)	Less than 10	10 to 20	20 to 30	30 to 40	40 to 50	50 to 75	75 to 100	100 to 200	Over 200
President's summit plan	7.6	1.9	3.3	2.9	2.9	1.8	2.1	1.9	1.7
Senate Finance Committee plan	0.0	−2.3	2.7	2.8	2.8	1.9	2.5	3.5	3.7
House Democratic alternative plan	−1.3	−1.6	1.0	1.0	.8	1.4	1.5	.7	7.4

The new Democratic package eliminates a loophole in the existing Tax Code known as "the bubble" which enables taxpayers earning over $150,000 to pay a lower effective tax rate than taxpayers earning under $150,000.

The new Democratic package reduces the increase in taxes on alcoholic beverages, which are also regressive.

The new Democratic package targets capital gains tax relief to middle-income families and small businesses. Every taxpayer would be allowed a lifetime exclusion of 50 percent of the first $200,000 in capital gains on farms, homes, and small businesses. In other words, if an individual purchased a home, farm or small business for $50,000 and later sold it for $250,000—a 500-percent increase—they would pay taxes on only $100,000 of their capital gain, instead of the full $200,000 again. In addition, in order to encourage investment in our economy, taxpayers would be allowed to exclude the first $1,000 in capital gains on stock they earned each year. The President's original plan would have targeted capital gains tax relief to the richest 2 percent of Americans, the Democratic alternative targets it to average families, farmers, and small businesses.

Mr. Chairman, like most Americans, I wish it was possible to adopt a budget package which did not raise any new revenues. Unfortunately, our deficit problem is so serious today that it is simply not possible to achieve this level of deficit reduction without either revenue increases or cuts in programs like Social Security which the American people do not want.

Some of my constituents have asked me, "Why can't we cut foreign aid?" I believe we can cut foreign aid, I have voted to cut foreign aid, and I have led the effort in the Congress to eliminate the duplicative and unnecessary foreign aid bureaucracy known as the National Endowment for Democracy.

The simple fact is that the President has repeatedly asked the Congress to increase, rather than decrease, spending for foreign aid. Most recently he asked us to forgive over $7 billion in loans to Egypt. Even more importantly, however, even if we eliminated all foreign aid spending that would only reduce the deficit by about one-fifth of the amount of this alternative package. Foreign aid can and should be cut, but it is still only a drop in the bucket of what we must cut.

Mr. Chairman, the message of the last several weeks is clear. The American people are mad, they are disgusted that the Congress and the President cannot get their acts together and solve this problem, and they are losing faith in their system of government.

Frankly, they have a right to be upset. They have a right to be angry at a President who goes off campaigning when he should be here in Washington using his leadership to help forge a budget agreement.

They have a right to be angry at a President who professes to be for a balanced budget but who, along with his predecessor, failed for more than 10 straight years to actually send a balanced budget to the Congress, and who failed to send his proposed budget to the Congress on time.

They also have a right to be angry at a Congress which allowed itself to be bamboozled into turning over its constitutional responsibilities to a secret group of budget summiteers. That is why the President's budget summit failed, why its recommendations were rejected by the Congress and the public.

They have a right to be angry at a Congress which does not act on appropriations bills on time. While the House passed 10 of the 13 regular appropriations bills more than 3 months before the start of the new fiscal year, the Senate had not passed any by that date and even by the start of the fiscal year it had only passed 4 of the 13 bills.

They have a right to be angry at a President who continues to rely on "blue smoke and mirror" accounting gimmicks and who changes his position on the budget more often than he changes his clothes.

They have a right to be angry at a Congress that seems to be endlessly tied up in partisan wrangling that fails to confront our problems head on.

They have a right to be angry at a President who continues to press for tax cuts for the affluent while substantially raising taxes for working families and slashing Medicare by $60 billion.

They have a right to be angry at a President who wastes millions of dollars by ordering a foolish weekend shutdown of the Federal Government.

They have a right to be angry at House Republicans who cannot decide what they are for. They will not support the President's budget. They will not support the Democratic alternative, and they cannot agree on their own proposal to reduce the deficit by $500 billion over 5 years. They are the "Abominable No Men" who are against everything and for nothing. Even the Senate Republicans were able to draft a budget package.

But Mr. Chairman, the American people are not interested in playing, "The Blame Game." They want a budget and a deficit reduction package, and they want them now.

They deserve a budget, and they deserve it now, and that is why I will support this package. Even though it is not perfect, and even though it does not do everything I would like, it is nonetheless, vastly fairer than any of the alternatives and it deserves our support.

Mr. Chairman, we live in a democracy and the process of democracy requires compromise. Even more importantly, however, it requires that we govern.

We cannot stick our heads in the sand. We cannot ignore what others want. We cannot shirk our responsibilities. We must exercise leadership. We must make the tough choices. We must compromise, and we must govern. This is true for both the President and the Congress.

This bill makes those choices and lives up to those responsibilities. It may not be perfect but it is by far the best proposal we have seen all year.

It deserves our support so that we can put an end to the chaos which has surrounded our budget process.

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my deep concern that the proposed Rostenkowski II budget reconciliation package fails to do the job that we, in Congress, had hoped to do. The package does make the necessary Federal deficit cuts, but it does so at the expense of those least able to foot the bill.

To begin with, a significant yet little-noticed provision of the Rostenkowski package would drop the indexing of "brackets"—the point at which one moves from the 0-percent bracket to the 15-percent bracket, from the 15-percent bracket to the 28-percent bracket, et-cetera—for 1 year. Under indexing, the brackets are adjusted upward each year by an amount equal to the increase in the Consumer Price Index. The purpose is to prevent lower income households from being thrust by inflation into the 15-percent bracket intended for middle income taxpayers, and similarly to prevent moderate income taxpayers from being thrust into the brackets intended for higher income taxpayers.

Dropping the indexing of brackets, upon first glance, might be thought to eliminate working peoples' tax cushion against inflation only for 1 year. In fact, it does much more than that. Indeed, perhaps the most egregious element of dropping bracket indexing is its permanence. Like the suspension of a cost-of-living-adjustment [COLA] increase, the effect is everlasting. If a senior citizen, for example, failed to receive his 5 percent COLA this year, even though his living costs increased by 5 percent, next year, when the COLA was resumed, his total income still would remain below the adjusted inflationary level. Similarly even if indexing should be restored a year from now, the brackets would forever be some 5 percent below where they should be. Although the Rostenkowski plan is billed as a "soak the rich" program, its suspension of indexing of the brackets is aimed straight at low and moderate income taxpayers forever.

Once the Democratic Party starts down the primrose path of omitting indexing, the days of indexing are clearly numbered. Obviously, the Democrats would love to eliminate indexing and allow inflation to raise taxes without their having to vote for it.

Equally disconcerting to me is the Rostenkowski plan's failure to include a Federal tax increase on gasoline prices paid at the pump. For 10 years, I have supported such an increase for a variety of reasons. First, an increase in the Federal tax on gasoline would be good energy conservation policy. The current situation in the Middle East demonstrates just how important it is for the United States to have in place an energy conservation policy. Higher gasoline prices will discourage people from taking unnecessary road trips and will encourage them instead to drive their cars prudently. Although an increase in the Federal gas tax is only a partial solution to our problem, it is a step in the right direction. Second, an increase in the Federal tax on gasoline is good environmental policy. Fewer automobiles spewing fewer pollutants into our air means cleaner air.

It is for those reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I regretfully must oppose the Rostenkowski II budget reconciliation package.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the alternative offered by Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI on behalf of the Ways and Means Committee, to the Omnibus Reconciliation Act.

This legislation is necessary to implement the savings in direct spending programs and revenue increases called for by the President and congressional leaders contained in the budget resolution recently adopted by the House and Senate. The total dollar amounts for spending reductions and revenue increases have already been agreed upon—it's now our job to see that the burden of deficit reduction is distributed as fairly and equitably as possible among all Americans. I support the Rostenkowski alternative, as a substitute for the tax and Medicare provisions of the bill, because it fits this criteria.

I know this agreement is not perfect, but I feel the process should move forward. If we do not enact a responsible deficit reduction package, the consequences will be far worse for the Nation. Across-the-board spending cuts are once again looming on the horizon and will occur should a sound deficit reduction package not be put in place.

Equity and fairness are the hallmarks of the Rostenkowski alternative. It provides substantive deficit reduction, $500 billion over the next 5 years, but does so in a fair manner—particularly to middle income Americans. It provides a good stimulus for economic growth and significantly improves on the budget-summit agreement in many ways.

The Medicare deductible increase is reduced by almost two-thirds, from $28 billion to $10 billion—keeping faith with older and disabled Americans.

Several revenue provisions are dropped entirely, including the increase in the gas tax, the new tax on petroleum fuels, the extension of the Medicare payroll tax to additional State and local government employees, the limitation on itemized deductions, the increase in railroad tier II taxes and the 2 week waiting period for unemployment benefits.

Provisions are provided designed to raise revenue in a more progressive manner, including elimination of the bubble in the Tax Code, creation of a 10-percent surtax on income above $1 million, increases in the minimum tax rate and in the amount of salary subject to the Medicare payroll tax, and a 1-year delay in tax indexation.

A limited tax break for capital gains is provided, allowing taxpayers to exclude up to $100,000 in capital gains over their lifetime.

The earned income tax credit for the working poor is increased—the refundable tax credit presently available to low-income working families with dependent children.

The Rostenkowski alternative represents tax fairness and real deficit reduction and will move our Nation toward a solid, growth-oriented economic track. It is a comprehensive and responsible package which provides savings and investment incentives to the small businessmen, farmers, and small investors who are the backbone of our economy. Its enactment will be a major step forward for our Nation, restoring fairness to our Tax Code and confidence abroad.

I urge its adoption.

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, the House Democratic budget proposal repesents a great improvement over President Bush's plan to deal with the deficit. It is not a perfect package, but it reduces Government spending by over $300 billion, is more fair to our seniors, and actually cuts taxes on people earning under $20,000 per year. It does not increase the gas tax home heating oil and rejects any limitations on deductions for State and local taxes, charitable contributions, and home mortgage payments. It is the best plan we can hope for at this time, and it will make real inroads on the deficit.

President Bush supports increased taxes. He has said so. The question now becomes who will pay them, lower and middle class people or the rich. Under the Democratic plan, those making under $20,000 per year actually receive a tax cut. Only those making over $200,000 per year are asked to pay substantially more but surely they can afford it. Contrast this with the President's plan which would raise taxes the most on those making under $10,000 per year and the least on those making over $200,000.

The Democratic plan eliminates completely the gasoline tax increase the President wants. The President would increase gas taxes by 0.12 cents per gallon. The Democratic plan zero.

The Democratic plan also rejects the obnoxious tax on home heating oil proposed in the original budget summit agreement.

Medicare cuts are reduced by over $17 billion in the House Democratic plan, and all of these savings go to beneficiaries.

The Democratic plan also eliminates the President's proposal to limit individual deductions for State and local taxes, mortgage interest payments, and charitable deductions. Such limits would damage a high-cost, high-tax State like New Jersey very much, as well as hamper the ability of charities to raise money. It would be a very dangerous precedent, and the Democratic bill quite properly fails to embrace it.

The Democratic plan is not perfect. There should be even deeper cuts in spending on defense weaponry, such as the Stealth bomber, and more emphasis should have been placed on economic growth and capital formation incentives. We cannot forget that important as it is to bring down the deficit, it is also vitally important how we go about doing so.

Despite these reservations, it is essential that we begin getting the deficit down and move the process forward. We are on the verge of fiscal implosion, and cannot just ignore this deficit any longer. The Democratic plan provides $500 billion in deficit reduction. The difference between it and the President's proposals is fairness in where the cuts are made. That is why I support it.

If Congress and the President enact such a fair and credible deficit reduction plan, it will send a strong message to the Federal Reserve to quickly move to bring interest rates down in order to keep the economy moving forward.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, seldom during my career in this House have I felt as frustrated as I do now. Our budget process has broken down, our political system is deadlocked as to how to proceed, and I must now vote between painful plans for solving a budget mess caused by legislation that I voted against.

Far too many of the comments I have heard about the bill before us merely confuse the issue. We must cut through this smokescreen and recognize one clear fact: the Democratic alternative budget plan is the only one produced so far that both meets the agreed upon target of $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years and treats middle income taxpayers fairly.

All of the plans to reduce the comprehensive plans to reduce the deficit involve raising taxes, but the Democratic alternative does it in a fair, straightforward manner. The wealthy would pay the same 33-percent rate paid by people in the upper middle class "bubble" bracket, deductions and bracket levels would not be adjusted for inflation for 1 year—a provision that affects all taxpayers—and millionaires would pay a 10-percent tax surcharge. This alternative will reduce the deficit—the most important step we can take to get our economy back on track—while limiting the tax increase on middle income Americans to roughly 1 percent.

The competing plans rely heavily on raising the gasoline excise tax—essentially nickel and diming average taxpayers to death—and limiting deductions. The limit on deductions is also unfair because it punishes citizens of States like New Jersey that have refused to compromise education, health care, and other services because of Federal spending cuts. These States have had to raise their own taxes to fill the gap, and we should not limit the deductions for State and local taxes. In addition, deduction limits diminish the incentive for taxpayers to give to charitable organizations—some of my colleagues may remember these groups as the "thousand points of light" miracle solution to the Nation's problems. It seems that the "points of light" are more popular when writing speeches than when writing tax laws.

All of the plans contain some other problems, but the Democratic alternative has them in less offensive doses. Its luxury tax provisions, provisions I oppose because they will cripple the domestic boat builders in my district who are already in an economic slump, are at least more fair. I was not surprised when lobbyists succeeded in exempting airplanes from the budget summit luxury tax. At least, however, the Democratic plan is more fair in that it subjects airplanes to the same tax as boats.

Finally, the Democratic plan is the lessor of two evils in an area that concerns me the most as chairman of the Select Aging Committee's Retirement Income Subcommittee. Few of our elderly poor can afford another penny for Medicare premiums and those premiums would be $10.80 per month higher in 1995 under the Democratic plan. Again, however, that is $8.10 per month less than what was called for in the summit agreement. Similarly, the annual Medicare deductible would rise by $25, but that is $50 less than the summit plan.

After last year's fiasco involving the proposed premium hikes for Medicare coverage of catastrophic illness, it is clear to me that Medicare cuts or premium hikes would be a last resort for anyone involved in putting together a budget plan. At the beginning of the summit negotiations, however, the Bush administration proposed much higher Medicare cuts. I seriously doubt the administration would have done so if they actually knew where cuts could be made in other areas. Nonetheless, administration officials continue to criticize Congress for spending too much, even though almost every dime was requested in the President's own budget.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the worst course is to continue the political gridlock and do nothing. Deficits drive up the interest rates and the cost of capital—whether it is capital invested in a new factory, a new home, or a new college education. Federal borrowing will sap our economic strength and diminish our economic standing. If we cannot reach the deficit reduction targets through sensible cuts, we must have the courage to raise taxes. Had taxes not been foolishly cut a decade ago, we would not be in this mess today. But we cut taxes and now we have to pay taxes, plus interest. The Democratic plan spreads this burden more fairly than any other, and while it is far from perfect, it is far better than the other options that have been presented to date.

There is no easy panacea for the deficit, including spending freezes. Across-the-board freezes are nice in the abstract, but do we freeze the war on drugs? What if there is another earthquake like the one that happened a year ago? Do we tell people, "Sorry, we froze all the emergency funds"? The freeze rhetoric is beginning to sound like the long distance telephone service commercials: A lot of people promising big savings, but no one willing to put it in writing.

Proposing a freeze so that inflation does the cutting for us also ignores the two largest nondefense costs in the general budget. Medicare costs, with a high medical inflation rate and an aging population, and the interest payment on the national debt are responsible for the vast majority of nondefense spending increases. These costs cannot be frozen. To say that they can is deceptive at best. These are just a few examples of the folly of relying on across-the-board freezes instead of making tough, sensible choices about the course of this Nation.

The middle class will truly pay if we do not reduce the deficit. Federal borrowing has produced some of the highest interest rates in the industrialized world. This fact helps the rich, as they get a higher return on the money they invest, but it cripples middle class families. High interest rates cost them every time they borrow money, whether through a mortgage, a credit card, or a student loan.

In evaluating these competing plans, we should look back at the policies that put us in the present mess. During the 1980 Presidential campaign, then candidate George Bush coined a term for the economic plan proposed by his Republican primary opponent, Ronald Reagan—"voodoo economics." This plan was based on the theory that cutting taxes for the rich; cutting Federal programs that helped local communities, such as revenue sharing; and cutting Federal aid for education would produce economic growth and miraculously balance the budget. President Reagan's election was accompanied by the election of a Republican majority in the Senate that would remain for 6 years, and together they put our economy in the hands of the ultimate voodoo doctor, David Stockman.

The first part of this Republican plan was to force through a tax cut that led not to economic growth, but a massive recession in 1982. I voted against the 1981 tax breaks for the wealthy, foreseeing the recession and future budget crisis that it would cause. As time has blurred the public memory, this recession is now often blamed on Jimmy Carter, but it was triggered by the phenomenal lack of capital in our economy after voodoo-credit card economics was put into place.

The second part of the plan was to divert the public's attention by blaming Democrats for spending too much on social programs. In fact, for every dollar in spending cuts that the Reagan and Bush administrations have asked for but not received, there has been at least a dollar in defense spending that Congress cut from Presidential budgets. If I had a dime for every time I've heard a President blame Congress for spending too much, I'd be worried about the surcharge on millionaire's taxes that is in the Democratic alternative. Despite these charges, Congress has actually approved $16 billion less in spending than was requested by Presidents Reagan and Bush in the budget proposals they have submitted to date.

Despite the deficits that were draining investment capital away from private investment, there was no move to reconsider these policies. Instead, our Government surrendered its collective courage and responsibility, and adopted the Gramm-Rudman budget ax to cure our deficit ills. Unfortunately, the Gramm-Rudman law contained perverse incentives and loopholes big enough to drive a truck through.

Rather than reducing the deficit, Gramm-Rudman has created fiscal year spending shifts, payday shifts, asset sales, bogus economic forecasts, and made robbing the Social Security and highway trust funds a regular habit—in short, voodoo two. I am proud to say that I voted against this gimmick. Congress and the President have the responsibility under the Constitution to pass laws that set our spending priorities. These decisions should not be left to an arbitrary process.

So here we are. In 10 short years since the first "voodoo" budget, these policies have resulted in tripling the national debt. George Bush and Ronald Reagan have so far added twice as much to the national debt as every President from George Washington through Jimmy Carter.

I am not saying that Democrats are blameless, but I am saying that when one party controls the White House and the Senate for 6 years, that party bears the responsibility for the policies that are enacted during that time. I am also saying that the Congress is in a deadlock. While Democrats can now push their initiatives, they have so far been unable to override a Presidential veto. In this situation, the only solution is for the President to lead, which is what the President is elected to do. Since the summit agreement collapsed, this leadership has consisted of the saying, "Read my hips!"

The summit plan was a bad one, and it was rejected by majorities of both parties. I realize it was a plan the President consented to, not one he would have designed himself. However, the President has since given confusing signals about what he wants. I hope the President will work with us, lay aside the veto threats and support this alternative plan. It is fair to the taxpayers and it is a serious deficit reduction effort.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Chairman, today we are voting on a bill which when modified with the Ways and Means Democratic alternative will provide the American people with deficit reduction of $500 billion over the next 5 years. This proposed budget will distribute the burden of this unprecedented deficit reduction package in a more fair and equitable manner than any other proposal which has surfaced to date.

Achieving a 5-percent reduction in programs and a 2.5-percent increase in revenues should not be accomplished at the expense of the elderly, the working class and the unemployed when the deficit can largely be attributed to the nearly 200 billion dollars' worth of annual interest payments on debt of $3.2 trillion. My colleagues will recall that Federal indebtedness was only $908 billion at the end of fiscal year 1980, and will grow to $3.5 trillion in the coming year. Recall also that interest payments on the Federal debt more than doubled—going from $75.2 billion in 1980 to $170.1 billion in 1990. National defense showed a similar increase of 228 percent—going from $134 billion in 1980 to $303 billion in 1990.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a tax-and-spend Democratic budget as asserted by my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. Seventy-two percent of the deficit reduction comes from spending reductions—only 28 percent from tax increases. This mix between spending reductions and revenue increases is nearly identical to that found in the summit package which was endorsed by the President and the leadership from across the aisle.

This staggering indebtedness is the legacy from a decade of supply-side economics—"All gain, no pain" in the words of MIT's Lester C. Thurow—lack of attention to the emerging savings and loan disaster, and unprecedented defense expansion.

The burden associated with undoing this decade of spending should not be borne by lower income families. They have already paid their share through lower real incomes in the last 10 years. Income growth during this period clearly favored the wealthiest: The average real income of the top 5 percent of the population increased from $120,253 to $148,438 while the average real income of the lowest 20 percent fell from $9,990 to $9,431.

The Ways and Means Democratic alternative is the only proposal which attempts to distribute the burden in such a manner so as to restore fundamental fairness and equity. The October summit agreement would have people with over $200,000 of annual income paying a lower proportion of their income—25.6 percent—than families earning less than half as much income. The Democratic alternative would restore equity and fairness by having the wealthiest pay proportionately more in taxes than families with lower incomes by raising the effective tax rate to 27 percent for filers with incomes in excess of $200,000.

It accomplishes this movement toward a fair and just distribution of tax burden by allocating the changes in taxes in a far more progressive manner than the summit proposal. At the lower end of the distribution, the Ways and Means Democratic alternative would offer a small decrease—1.6 percent—in the tax burden of those least able to afford a decrease in their aftertax incomes: The October summit would have families with under $10,000 incomes give up an additional 7.6 percent of their already meager incomes. The summit would require the wealthiest, that is, incomes over $200,000, to give up only 1.7 percent of their more than adequate and generous incomes, while the Democratic alternative would ask for a progressivity-restoring 7.4 percent.

I would also like to point out that the proposal does not actually increase the maximum effective rate—it is already at 33 percent; it simply extends the coverage of this rate to the wealthiest taxpayers by bursting the anomalous bubble. Changing the rate structure still will keep the maximum rates considerably below the 50-percent rate which was in effect as recently as 1986 and dramatically below the 70-percent rate which was in effect until 1980.

Mr. Chairman, I do not need to stress the importance of deficit reduction. Reducing the deficit will allow the economy to grow, free future generations of an onerous burden, and restore rationality to the budget process. We have waited too long to enact a budget, we must get on with the work our constituents sent us here to do. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support the amended proposal, now. It is consistent with the President's deficit reduction goals, moves us toward a budget for the entire Government before Friday at midnight and represents a workable, doable, and realistic way to restore faith in the American democracy.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

□ 1900

The CHAIRMAN. Four hundred four Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present, and the Committee will resume its business.

□ 1910

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I think today is a very important day and I think this vote is a very important vote. This is a vote on which we can begin to turn the corner on the deficit problem that has bedeviled our country in the last 10 years, and especially in the last 12 months. It is a day when we can begin to rebuild the trust of the American people that we as an institution, as Representatives, have the ability to address this problem head-on and do something about it that is solid, do something about it that is fair, do something about it that is right.

The change began 5 months ago when our President said that we needed a budget summit. I admire what he said. It took courage.

He said the problem cannot be solved by inaction.

He said we need an agreement that will erase this problem for 5 years to come, and he said that we need to work together to get rid of the problem. We are not going to grow our way out of it. It is not going to evaporate because of some supply side theory.

We have got to get together to do something about it.

Then in July, he said there have to be spending cuts, tax revenue increases, growth initiatives, and enforcement measures to make it stick. That was hard for the President to do. He had to go back on his "read my lips" statement at the Republican Convention, but he did, I am sure, because he believed it was the right thing for the country to do.

The bipartisan leadership, Republican and Democrat, said, "We agree. We ought to do all of those things to solve the deficit problem."

So the question tonight is not whether we need a plan of $500 billion, not whether there will be spending cuts and revenue increases. The question is, who will pay?

I was at home over the weekend. People were angry about the budget summit deal. One man came up to me and he said, "Here we go again. We in the middle class pay and the rich play."

Another woman came up to me and she said, "You know, we are going to have to pay the beer tax and the cigarette tax and the gasoline tax, and you are here to tell me that people who earn $200,000 a year aren't going to have a larger increase in their taxes?"

You bet people are angry. The middle class is angry, and it is not envy. It is not class warfare. In this great country, everybody has always believed that if you work hard you can get ahead, but they have also believed that everybody has got to pay their fair share.

Jack Kennedy said it right when he said, "To those to whom much is given, much is expected." The American people believe that, and the plan that Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI has given us enacts that. It says that people at the top should have the highest rate. Does that not make sense? Is that not just common sense, that people at the top should have the highest rate?

His plan says that millionaires, people who have a million dollars in taxable income after the itemized deductions are taken out and after all the adjustments, should have a 10-percent surtax. That just adds another 2½ percent to their overall rate. I think it makes sense.

So tonight, Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen, we have a chance to do what is right, to do a $500 billion package, to make it a fair package that asks everybody in proportion to what they made to pay what they can and should pay.

I had a friend of mine call me the other day, in fact yesterday, one of the wealthiest people in the country. You would all know his name. He said, "DICK, I am embarrassed that you are not asking me and those like me to pay my fair share. I am ready to do it."

The Rostenkowski plan asks him to do it. He should be asked to do it, and I ask for your vote tonight for what is right and fair and solid and will put this country in the right direction.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. VANDER JAGT].

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Chairman, there is an old Biblical saying that "by their stripes you shall know them."

Well, by their budget reconciliation packages, you really get to know them. The Democrat package returns Democrats to your roots of tax and spend, with which you are comfortable.

Our Republican package returns all of us to our roots, $400 billion in deficit reduction with no new taxes. That is so appealing that the Democrat majority did not even dare let us bring it to the floor for a vote. It contains real budget reform, and there is not a person in this Chamber who looks at this mess who does not know that we need real budget reform.

By tougher enforcement through not having the Rules Committee waive the Budget Act or enhance rescission authority, we make sure that the spending cut promises are kept for the first time.

It is very interesting to note that in the 58 times the Rules Committee this year has waived the budget to increase taxes, they could not waive it once for a tax reduction.

Spending too much is what got us into the mess we are in, not insufficient tax revenues. During the decade of the 1980's, taxes paid by the American people more than doubled. Dollars spent by a Democrat Congress went up even faster than that. Except for defense, a Democrat Congress has never met a spending program it did not like.

And so a $400 billion deficit reduction program that is enforceable does you a heck of a lot more good than a $500 billion program that is not enforceable and never has been.

I congratulate you, though, for putting the label of tax on your tax-and-spend proposal, but not for creating the illusion that you can pay for your spending programs through soaking the rich.

Oh, you put a 10-percent surtax on millionaires that picks up about $1 billion a year. That is just petty cash for the big spenders over there. And as a matter of fact, the rich are paying far more in taxes and a far bigger percentage of the total tax pie than they were 10 years ago, and that is a statistical fact.

And so, the soak-the-rich is just kind of a demagogic smokescreen for the Democrats to reach their hand through and pick the pockets of middle America because that is where the money is, because there are so many more of them.

The freeze on the personal exemptions and the brackets is an income-tax increase for every American. A family of four earning $34,000, it is a 6-percent increase; for a single person earning $21,000, it is a 5-percent increase; $36 billion in income-tax increases.

And if the freeze is permanent instead of temporary—and I do not doubt but what it is going to be—and there is a little more inflation, it is a $200 billion tax wallop to the midsection of middle America by the Democrats, and the rich do not pay a penny of that because their exemptions and brackets have been phased out a long time before that.

Oh, yes, there are some corporations, say an Anheuser Busch, that has reluctantly acquiesced in a beer tax hike. Why shouldn't they? It is no skin off their back. They do not pay it; Joe Sixpack does.

And you would be interested to know that the revenues paid by corporate America are about $40 billion less a year than the revenue projections of tax reform. Individuals are paying about $40 billion more a year.

Now, if you just cannot resist raising taxes, why do you let corporate America walk away scot free and dump the load on middle America that is already paying more than its fair share?

And, boy, I congratulate you on the way you really socked it to that rich guy who wants to buy a yacht. He is going to have to resist trading up and stick with the poor little boat he has got and the only loser will be the guy who builds the boats.

I wish your compassion for the unemployed were strong enough to worry about preventing him from becoming unemployed in the first place. I am convinced that there are members of your caucus who would much rather not have a rising tide lift hundreds of rowboats if it would lift the yacht or two in the process.

Fortunately, the 1980's showed us there is a better way than taxing and spending.

More than 20 million new jobs through growth, opportunity and people working for themselves and not for the Government made America the economic envy of the world.

Recently, a Communist city councilman of Leningrad said, "What we got to do is move away from Marxism, from Leninism, through socialism and get to Reaganomics as fast as we can."

The whole world, the whole world is rushing toward the philosophy of less government and lower taxes and only House Democrats are rushing in the opposite direction.

Taxing and spending has been good for you for winning elections, but it has been a bummer for the American people and wherever it has been tried.

Now, not before this House, because of your rules, but before America there are two starkly contrasting budgets that move America in opposite directions.

The wind is blowing hard on our ship of state from the Persian Gulf and the S&L crisis and a sluggish economy.

There is a poem that says, "One ship sails east and another west with the self-same winds that blow. 'Tis the set of the sail and not the gale that determines which way we go."

Tonight House Democrats are setting the sail of our ship of state that will determine the way we go for the next 5 years without even a vote on going the other way.

And on November 6, the American people, in a referendum, will decide which way they would have liked to go.

Do they want to go the Democratic way of tax and spend and bigger government of Jimmy Carter, Walter Mondale, and Mike Dukakis, or the Republican way of a little less spending and a lot more incentive and freedom and opportunity for all people?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will now close out the debate. The gentleman has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, it is with great pleasure that I rise in strong support of the Ways and Means Democratic alternative. In the months and years that I have been campaigning to increase revenues as part of a serious deficit reduction plan, I have stressed the need for tough decisions that would inevitably be painful for everyone concerned.

And I have acknowledged that our political system has always been very reticent about embracing policies that will impose new burdens on our constituents. Unfortunately, too many of us have believed the pollsters' warning that higher taxes are the political kiss of death. Today, we finally have an opportunity to shatter that myth and be honest with the American people—and with ourselves.

We have a chance to escape from the budget swamp and move forward.

When I unveiled the Rostenkowski challenge in March of this year, I suggested that a $500 billion deficit reduction over 5 years was an appropriate goal. Today, to both my delight and surprise, we are on the verge of achieving that goal. Today's debate is about who will pay.

When I first put forth my plan, I emphasized the need for shared sacrifice. Fairness demands that everyone who can afford to make a contribution to deficit reduction be required to do so. The wealthy, who have more, should appropriately be asked to contribute more. These time-honored principles are contained in the amendment we are presenting today.

When I outlined my priorities last March, I stressed the need to protect the structure of our tax system and avoid making any specific group a target. I warned that it would be wrong to ask specific geographic areas to be the designated scapegoats in this debate. The plan we are now debating has a national impact.

It is both credible and responsible—fully achieving the $194 billion in deficit reduction that the Committee on Ways and Means was assigned. Achieving this goal was not easy. Achieving it in a fair fashion was a major challenge. But we have met that challenge.

Last March, I suggested a reversal of the political philosophy that drove too many of our decisions during the 1980's. We borrowed excessively to finance the Government and decided to let our children pay the bills later. Our legacy to the next generation is nothing less than a multibillion-dollar IOU.

What we are doing today is getting our house in order, putting ourselves in a position where we can invest in the future rather than fighting over how to pay for the past. Our vote today is an important first step toward reordering our priorities.

I participated in the budget summit earlier this year and view it as a partial success. It set credible goals, but achieved them with such harsh policy choices that this House could not accept them. Clearly, equity was a major victim of the summit agreement. It simply asked low- and middle-income taxpayers—and Medicare beneficiaries—to pay too much.

Today, equity and fairness make a comeback. And regular order makes a comeback as well. For when we embrace this Democratic alternative, we are telling the Nation that we are again ready, however belatedly, to govern—responsibly and fairly.

We are saying to the millions of Americans who hold their Government in disrepute that we hear them, that we are ready to do our job as their elected representatives.

At last, we will reclaim our right—and responsibility—to govern. We will provide the honesty that our constituents expect and demand of us.

As both policy and procedure, the Democratic alternative stands head and shoulders above any other option. It reduces the deficit, but does so in a way that is fair, particularly to middle-income Americans.

I reluctantly supported the budget summit agreement. But I enthusiastically back this proposal. It is better in so many ways.

It eliminates the 2-week waiting period for unemployment benefits. Our need to balance the budget does not give us the right to pick on people who are already down.

Our alternative reduces the added burden on Medicare beneficiaries by $17 billion, so that they are not asked to carry an unfair share of the load.

It eliminates the gasoline and petroleum tax increases that would have been onerous to those Americans who depend on their automobiles and heat their homes with oil.

It drops the proposed limits on itemized deductions that would have imposed restrictions on millions of Americans in some States, while having no impact on those who live elsewhere.

And it provides new incentives for middle-income Americans that will encourage savings and investment.

Our alternative accomplishes all this while also making our tax system more progressive. We have returned to a basic principle of tax fairness—that people should be taxed according to their ability to pay. Simply stated, that means that high-income people should pay more than low-income people do.

Let us be absolutely clear about what has occurred. During the last decade, incomes of the rich and famous soared while those of low- and middle-income people stagnated. Government policy encouraged this trend rather than correcting it. That is not my idea of the appropriate role for a government that is supposed to serve all the people.

In developing the Democratic alternative, we have again proven that it is possible to do well while doing good. Our plan represents good policy—and good policy is good politics.

Our alternative is bold, but it is fair enough to win broad public acceptance. That is why it is so popular with the American people. And that is why it deserves support from all of us—on both sides of the aisle.

I got into politics nearly four decades ago because I wanted to help create a better America for my constituents and for the next generation. I believe that a responsible Government can be a strong positive force in our society.

Passing this amendment sends a clear message. It says that Government will be a positive force for responsible budgeting and fair taxation.

It says that we can reduce the deficit, increase fairness, and restore confidence in the international financial community.

It says that our children will inherit something more than the enormous debts of the current generation.

Approval of our alternative will be a proud moment for this House. We will be able to look the American people squarely in the eye and say that we have governed responsibly and fairly.

And to each other we can at long last say that we have done our jobs.

I urge all my colleagues to give strong support to the Democratic alternative.

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)";

(B) in the fourth sentence, by striking "charged" and inserting "recovered"; and

(C) by striking the fifth sentence and all that follows through "Any person who" in the seventh sentence and inserting the following:

"(2)(A) In the case of a claim of entitlement to past-due benefits under this title, if—

"(i) an agreement between the claimant and another person regarding any fee to be recovered by such person to compensate such person for services with respect to the claim is presented in writing to the Secretary prior to the time of the Secretary's determination regarding the claim,

"(ii) the fee specified in the agreement does not exceed the lesser of—

"(I) 25 percent of the total amount of such past-due benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a)), or

"(II) $4,000, and

"(iii) the determination is favorable to the claimant,

then the Secretary shall approve that agreement at the time of the favorable determination, and (subject to paragraph (3)) the fee specified in the agreement shall be the maximum fee. The Secretary may from time to time increase the dollar amount under clause (ii)(II) to the extent that the rate of increase in such amount, as determined over the period since January 1, 1991, does not at any time exceed the rate of increase in primary insurance amounts under section 215(i) since such date. The Secretary shall publish any such increased amount in the Federal Register.

"(B) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'past-due benefits' excludes any benefits with respect to which payment has been continued pursuant to section 223(g).

"(C) In the case of a claim with respect to which the Secretary has approved an agreement pursuant to subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall provide the claimant and the person representing the claimant a written notice of—

"(iii) a description of the procedures for review under paragraph (3).

"(ii) the person representing the claimant submits a written request to the Secretary to increase the maximum fee.

Any such review shall be conducted after providing the claimant, the person representing the claimant, and the adjudicator with reasonable notice of such request and an opportunity to submit written information in favor of or in opposition to such request. The adjudicator may request the Secretary to reduce the maximum fee only on the basis of evidence of the failure of the person representing the claimant to repre-

"(B)(i) In the case of a request for review under subparagraph (A) by the claimant or by the person representing the claimant, such review shall be conducted by the administrative law judge who made the favorable determination or, if the Secretary determines that such administrative law judge is unavailable or if the determination was not made by an administrative law judge, such review shall be conducted by another person designated by the Secretary for such purpose.

"(C) Upon completion of the review, the administrative law judge or other person conducting the review shall affirm or modify the amount which would otherwise be the maximum fee. Any such amount so affirmed or modified shall be considered the amount of the maximum fee which may be recovered under paragraph (2). The decision of the administrative law judge or other person conducting the review shall not be subject to further review.

"(4)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), if the claimant is determined to be entitled to past-due benefits under this title and the person representing the claimant is an attorney, the Secretary shall, notwithstanding section 205(i), certify for payment out of such past-due benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a)) to such attorney an amount equal to the maximum fee, but not in excess of 25 percent of such past-due benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a)).

"(B) The Secretary shall not in any case certify any amount for payment to the attorney pursuant to this paragraph before the expiration of the 15-day period referred to in paragraph (3)(A) or, in the case of any review conducted under paragraph (3), before the completion of such review.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, are we going to read the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is designated under the rule, it will not be read. It is already designated.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, can the Chair explain to me how we designated something that did not exist until 10 minutes ago?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, it is stated that the said amendment will be considered as read.

Mr. FRENZEL. No matter how voluminous?

Mr. Chairman, I have a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRENZEL. Was there a unanimous-consent request made that the Panetta amendment not be subject to points of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule also provides for that.

Mr. FRENZEL. Was there any unanimous-consent request made with respect to the Panetta amendment today, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. No. It was not necessary. The rule provides for that waiver.

Mr. FRENZEL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask of the Chair: Are copies of the current version of the Panetta amendment available in sufficient number that all the Members get a chance to look at it? Do we have copies that we can look at of the current version?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, we have provided copies to the Republican side, and we have a copy at the desk. Those are the copies that are available.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, can the Chair tell us how many pages are in the amendment? We are not sure what we have here.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will bear with the Chair, the Chair will get the gentleman that answer.

Mr. FRENZEL. I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The pages do not seem to be numbered.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, would the Chair have someone count them?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to cooperate with the inquiry, if the gentleman will just be patient.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, is this in the context of a point of order, or is this just time taken off the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will respond, and time is not coming out of debated time.

In answer to the question, it is roughly 200 pages.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the Chair.

Mr. GINGRICH. Would the Chair please check and let us know exactly how many pages?

Mr. Chairman, I have a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GINGRICH. Would the Chair explain? I just read the resolution briefly. Would the Chairman explain where in the rule points of order are waived on this amendment? It says here, "Points of order are waived on the amendments which have been printed." It says, "All points of order are hereby waived against amendments printed in the report."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will respond. It is on page 3, lines 11 and 12, "All points of order against the amendments en bloc are hereby waived."

The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member in opposition will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment that we present here is an effort to strip matters that are not, we believe, related to deficit reduction or involve questionable savings that are part of the reconciliation bill. We tried to establish a precedent within the reconciliation bill of trying to eliminate those matters reported from the various committees that do not relate specifically to reconciliation.

This is obviously an effort. It is not as perfect as any of us would have hoped.

Obviously there are areas here that require discretion as to what, in fact, relates to deficit reduction and what does not, and in addition to that, there are areas, particularly in the Medicaid and Medicare areas, that relate to the summit agreement that involve efforts to try to reduce the hit that impacts on both Medicare and Medicaid. Those are areas under the jurisdiction of both the Committee on Energy and Commerce as well as the Committee on Ways and Means.

Let me cite some of the proposals that are stripped here in the amendment. With regard to the Committee on Agriculture, we eliminate the GSE provisions that they included there. This is true also for the Committee on Banking and Urban Affairs as well as for the Committee on Ways and Means.

The reason we stripped the GSE provisions is because, under the budget process reform section, we provide in conjunction with the administration a proposal that comprehensively deals with GSE's overall, and for that reason we felt that it was not appropriate for each of the committees to develop their own particular approach to dealing with GSE's.

In Education and Labor we stripped the child care bill which was included by the Committee on Education and Labor, but it is a bill that we feel should be dealt with outside of reconciliation.

We also stripped, under the Education and Labor provision, OSHA criminal penalties, again because we were concerned about questionable savings related to that provision.

In addition, in the Committee on the Interior, we stripped Bryce Canyon as well as the reauthorization of the BLM area.

Merchant Marine and Fisheries, we stripped proposals related to the Sabine River in Texas, and legislation involving World War II merchant mariners, as well as an authorization for the Department of Commerce regarding real property in Hampton Roads, VA, as well as efforts to require water quality standards for coastal recreation waters. All of those are included for stripping in this legislation.

In the Public Works and Transportation area, we stripped a number of provisions that we felt should not be included, because the gas tax is not included in the final version of the bill, and, again, on Ways and Means we stripped provisions related to GSE's.

Let me mention with regard to 2 areas, Energy and Commerce and Ways and Means, what we have included in this amendment is what the summit had included with regard to areas in both Medicaid and Medicare that would assist low-income individuals with regard to the cuts that were made. These are proposals that are contained in the Finance Committee version of the bill, and both committees felt they had to include these provisions for conference purposes, when they go to conference.

Those are the primary elements included in this amendment.

I would urge the House to adopt it because the savings, incidentally, that would result from this are about $3 billion as a result of stripping these 24 areas.

They do include additions of about $2 billion as a result of the Medicare provisions under Ways and Means, so the net savings in this proposal is about $1 billion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to give a correct answer to the inquiry: 260 pages.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the Chair very much.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this has been a very long, agonizing process for all of us, and it is very hard for us not to lose control of our emotions and our tempers as we move along.

But I must say the presentation of the Panetta amendment is the lousiest, lowest thing that this House has produced that has had anything to do with the budget process.

We were told in the Committee on Rules that the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] would be promoting a resolution that was going to strip extraneous matters out of this reconciliation bill. I presented to the gentleman from California a list of 63 Energy and Commerce extraneous provisions, 18 Ways and Means extraneous provisions, 7 others, and he himself had a list of 24 extraneous provisions.

The bill he has given us today has removed only one of the items that I asked him to remove.

□ 2010

It has removed a couple of dozen of the items that he intended to remove from the beginning, and that was all right. However, what is the all-around fleecing, and I must say, it is hard for me to go on without losing control of my temper, but in that 260 pages, he has $1.9 billion in new spending that has no business being in the reconciliation bill and is not the intention of this amendment. I think it is an absolute flaunting of the budget process and of this whole procedure we have been going through for a year, the fact he did it, and your leadership let him do it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I regret that the gentleman feels the way he does with regard to the elements in this amendment, because generally I would take it that the gentleman and those on the other side of the aisle feel that way about the summit agreement overall. However, the summit agreement itself provided for $4 billion to try to deal with issues related to Medicare and Medicaid. That is in the summit agreement.

I refer Members to Mr. Darman's copy on, I believe, page 11 of the agreement provided for that; $2 billion has been included in Medicaid, $2 billion has been included in Medicare. That is the summit agreement. Those are the provisions that are included as part of this amendment. They abide by what we agree to.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California, [Mr. HAWKINS], chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I find it very difficult to express my opposition to the motion. I know that the gentleman has worked hard on crafting this package.

I cannot, in good conscience, however, vote for anything that is going to strike at the very heart of our future, the children of America. I am surprised at the attempt to define what is deficit reduction. According to the same logic, we would not have defense in this package either, because that does not contribute anything to deficit reduction. Yet, we know good and well that we want strong defense.

Now, as to the so-called alleged reason for doing it, it is said that child care is going to be considered outside of reconciliation. Do not believe it. The other body has put it in this package in reconciliation, and so we have a situation in which the House is going to confer with the other body, and there is no Member in this body that is going to confer with their counterparts on the Senate side.

Now, the Senate has already crafted a child care bill. In effect, that bill eliminates Head Start expansion, it eliminates all the titles that pertain to education, titles I and II of the House-passed bill. This body has passed a child care bill twice. Once last year, again this year. What we are doing now is stripping what we have done in the field of child care from this package. Not to be considered in reconciliation, because we will not confer on it.

The Committee on Education and Labor has worked for 3 long years on trying to craft a bill and they have approved it. They have instructed Members twice on what to do in connection with it. Now, in one motion, they are asked to strike it entirely from the subject matter.

We have hurt the children of America too much already. We have deprived them of nutrition. We are depriving them of a decent education. We have cut back on the programs, WIC and the other programs, that pertain to the welfare children, and now we say we will strip them, child care, from this package. It includes the latchkey kids that leave school every day, have no home to go to because their parents are trying to work. It will place more children into poverty. It will deprive the parents who are working, for the sake of their children, of the opportunity of having a safe place to leave their children.

I think it is unmerciful, and I ask Members to consider. It is a tough vote. I am sorry that Members have been put in this catch-22 situation. Vote against the motion.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GRADISON], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, we have learned a lot about the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] in recent days, but one of the things we have seen in the last few minutes which may surprise Members a bit is that he is a master of understatement. Believe me, what he has said about the package which we saw for the first time as a possible addition to this bill about half an hour ago was an understatement.

Happily, based upon my reading of the vote which we took a few minutes ago, this whole thing is not going anywhere anyway, and I think we can rest secure in that fact. I think that is reasonable to address the question to the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget. He has told Members that the object of this exercise through the Panetta amendment is to strike extraneous material and conform to the summit agreement. There is noting in the summit agreement about these 74 pages of additional material.

Yes, there was money set aside for additional spending, but what the Committee on Ways and Means did in carrying out its responsibility was to decide not to spend that money, not to spend this money, this compulsion to spend money as if it will burn holes in the bottom of our pockets, which is how we got into this trouble that we are in right now.

Let me talk about this package. Those members on the Committee on Ways and Means saw it for the first time yesterday. It was brought up at a markup this afternoon. It has never been marked up by the Subcommittee on Health and Safety. That is OK. It was going to be taken up directly by the Committee on Ways and Means. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means at 3 o'clock this afternoon assured the members of our committee that this matter would be subject to a full committee markup beginning at 9 o'clock tomorrow. That schedule stands. His only request was that we make our amendments in writing and have them in his hand this afternoon.

That is exactly what we did. Who can Members trust around here? Who can Members trust when they are told that the procedure is to work through the committee, and then we are told all of a sudden—and I learned this as I came over for this last vote—that something which our committee is supposed to mark up, and much of it is very good legislation, is going to be taken away from Members entirely?

This is not a trivial matter, and it is certainly not technical. The net increase in spending involved in this is $1.8 billion, a very interesting thing to bring in right at the time when we have had so much talk all day about cutting spending, cutting spending. This increase in spending, there is no necessity for bringing it up at this time. The committee can work its will tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman, I know the outcome of what I am about to do, but I want to make a point by doing this.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike from the Panetta amendment the Medicare provisions.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I was not privy to the deliberations that came out with the budget summit, but the Committee on Ways and Means is charged with apportioning $2 billion to help ease the burden on lower income and those less able to care for themselves.

The provisions in the Panetta amendment, most of which have been discussed at great length by the Subcommittee on Health under the Committee on Ways and Means are indeed good legislation.

As to whether this procedure is any different than the Gramm-Latta procedure of some years ago is a matter for each person to decide for themselves. However, there are many good features that are no-cost provisions. Patient self-determination; living will procedures; technical and miscellaneous amendments to all parts of Medicare; assistance to HMO's; Med-Gap standards, which is in the Senate bill, and the Committee on Energy and Commerce bill, our bills; controlled substances; accountable collection, which is endorsed by both the Health and Human Services and the Drug Enforcement Administration.

There is a mammography benefit which was very popular which is in here at no additional annual or monthly premium.

There are exempt hospitals that are getting assistance.

There is a provision to provide postponement of severe impacting on certain training hospitals that train both nurses and doctors.

There are rural blood labs, mental health hospitals, help for psychologists, SRD rates are increased somewhat.

There is a hospice extension.

There is radiology service.

And we saved more. The net spending is $1.849 billion. It is less than was authorized in the summit.

I would urge my colleagues, this is a fair carrying out of the responsibilities of the Medicare Program, and the Ways and Means Committee's responsibility. I urge adoption of the Panetta amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to note that the Panetta amendment purports to remove some of the extraneous matters that are attached to this bill. Maybe it does, maybe it does not. We have not seen it. We do not know what is in it, but some of the provisions in labor law is not enough. The Panetta amendment at most, at best removes not all of the egregious labor law changes, not most of them, or not even the worst of the amendments.

In fact, we know that the Panetta amendment does not remove the OSHA minimum fines for nonserious violations.

It does not remove the tenfold increase in child labor law violations, and does not remove the National Labor Relations Act radical revolutionary restructuring of the entirety of 60 years of labor law.

The last time that we saw the reconciliation that is on the floor on labor law tonight, was 12 years ago in labor law reform in 1977 and 1978, and it was unceremoniously rejected by the House and the Senate in the Carter administration, and the next time we see it, it appears in reconciliation.

I would suggest that the Panetta amendment should be removing that extraneous labor law change. It is a straight power grab and and it should not be in here.

This language that is in the reconciliation bill tonight was included the last time in the 1977 Labor Law Reform bill, resulting in a 19-day filibuster in the Senate, six cloture votes that failed before it was finally withdrawn. Since that time, these provisions that are in reconciliation tonight that the Panetta amendment does not remove, these provisions have had no hearings, no markups, no bills introduced, no allegations that such provisions are either desirable or necessary.

At 10:15 yesterday morning the language reappeared and was put in the budget reconciliation and has not been removed by the extraneous amendments of tonight.

The House Education and Labor Committee has included in its portion of budget reconciliation, sweeping change in the National Labor Relations Act. I urge that these provisions be deleted.

The National Labor Relations Act provisions of reconciliation pose as mere remedy increases. In fact, this language was included in the 1977 labor law reform bill which resulted in a 19-day filibuster in the Senate and 6 cloture votes before it was finally withdrawn. Since that time, these provisions have not once been aired—there have been no hearings, no mark-ups, no bills introduced, no allegations that such provisions are necessary. At 10:15 a.m. yesterday morning the language reappeared and was put into budget reconciliation.

The legislation turns 60 years of labor law on its head:

First, monetary penalties. The National Labor Relations act has always been treated as a remedial statute, not a punitive law. This legislation for the first time would allow the NLRA general counsel to assess penalties of at least $1,000 to $10,000 per employee in the case of an unfair labor practice, with no dollar cap on the total fine. For 60 years the NLRA has imposed back pay, reinstatement, obligation to bargain, or double back pay—compensatory, make-whole relief, never punitive damages.

Second, personal and individual liability. For the first time, individuals rather than employers could be held personally liable for the fines. For example, each member of a negotiating team could be penalized up the maximum amount per employee. Clearly, these provisions will inhibit employers from engaging in collective bargaining at all.

Third, guilty until proven innocent. The NLRA general counsel has always acted as the prosecutor in unfair labor cases; the NLRB acts as the adjudicator of the complaint. Under this new budget reconciliation language, the general counsel would charge that an unfair labor practice has been committed and then assess the penalties, before the case is adjudicated.

Fourth, inequitable standards for assessing penalties. The standards for assessing penalties are highly inequitable. They depend, in part, on the ability to pay and "other matters as justice may require." In other words, the deeper the pocket, the bigger the penalty. While such a policy would further Congress' ability to generate new revenues, it hardly seems just. Instead of looking at the seriousness of the violation, the Government would look instead at the size of the corporate treasury.

CONCLUSION

Organized labor would undoubtedly be delighted with enactment of these new revenue raising amendments to the National Labor Relations Act. Management employees would be so intimidated by the penalties the committee proposes that organizing employees and negotiating costly labor contracts would be even easier than that proposed in the Carter administration's labor law reform package that tore Congress apart in 1978.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, with regard to the provisions that were just mentioned by the gentleman from Texas, every one of those involves savings. The child labor provision provides for $45 million in savings over 5 years.

The NLRA civil penalties involve $96 million in savings over 5 years, and do the other provisions.

The gentleman may not like the provisions, but the committee reported that to the Budget Committee and responded to the reconciliation instruction to produce savings, and that is what we included in the reconciliation bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], the majority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I urge Members to vote for this amendment for a variety of reasons.

First, the attempt here is take out extraneous provisions, and you have heard Members who are chagrined about the taking out of extraneous provisions.

We took out the GSE proposal from the Agriculture Committee and the Banking Committee.

We took the child care bill out of Education and Labor, the OSHA criminal penalties just talked about.

We took out facilities loans for low income high minority schools, the GSE provisions of the Ways and Means Committee, a fee from the Energy and Commerce Committee, provisions on Bryce Canyon in the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, the reauthorization of the BLM program, removed some provisions that had to do with the National Wildlife Refuge, Sabine River and on and on, a number of provisions in the Public Works and Transportation Committee, a whole list of provisions that are there and again the provisions in Ways and Means on GSE's.

Now, the argument has been made here tonight that there have been provisions put in the bill on Medicaid and Medicare. There is a good reason for that. There are a series of cuts in Medicare and Medicaid in the budget bill, in the reconciliation bill.

In the summit, I negotiated an arrangement with Mr. Darman and the other negotiators that we would have $4 billion in this bill that would come from the reimposition of the Social Security tax on State and local employees, which brings in $11 billion, and it was said that $4 billion of that bill, the income from the bill, would be used to cushion the blow of the Medicaid and the Medicare cuts.

Because of those agreements, we asked the Energy and Commerce Committee to put in their provisions to cushion the blow of the Medicaid and the Medicare cuts, and we asked the Ways and Means Committee to do the same, and in this bill are those provisons from the Ways and Means Committee.

So this is an attempt so that we are in conference in reconciliation. We have similar provisions in Medicare and Medicaid, as the Senate does.

The other areas that we feel are extraneous, we tried to put in this bill. That is the reason we are asking that those measures be stricken.

So I would urge the Members to vote for the bill. I think it is proper. I think it will put us in the position that we need to be in the conference, and I think it is in concert with what we have tried to do in this budget summit.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I hope this moment will not pass without this body taking notice of what has happened with this bill.

The provisions of the Social Security bill that were to be considered in the Ways and Means Committee this afternoon, were removed from that committee. They were included in this provision, and the effect of that trick has been to deny the Ways and Means Committee and this body an opportunity to eliminate or ameliorate the earnings penalty. Senior citizens age 65 to 69 have a cruel, mean-hearted tax that is imposed on them. Our ability to ameliorate that, to take that away, to lessen that tax, has been denied because of the foolish trick, I believe, of including the Social Security provisions in this bill. That is not fair. It is not right.

Occasionally things get so cute I think they deny common justice, and that is what has happened in this case.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I have to respond to the statements of the distinguished beloved and erudite majority leader, who said that this amendment was particularly appropriate. One statement be made was that these items came from the committee. They did not come from the committee. Many of them have never seen hearings in the committee. The committee did not see them. They sprang full blown from the head of Zeuss, as far as we know, and if Zeuss is Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI or subcommittee Chairman STARK or Chairman PANETTA, I do not know, and I do not care. They did not come from the committee.

Now, secondly, the distinguished majority leader said that he negotiated these things in the summit. He did not negotiate any of these things. There are dozens of no-cost items in here that are policy changes that have nothing to do with the summit. He did not negotiate those, and they were never raised in the summit.

Now, this amendment was supposed to be in the Rules Committee to remove extraneous provisions. It has become a vehicle for more wanton spending and for game playing.

Now, I am used to being rolled around here. I have been in the minority for 20 years. I know that I cannot affect policy and that my use around here is as a steppingstone for ambitious majority Members. And I do not mind getting clobbered on policy questions. And I do not even mind getting licked by your crummy rules that you arrange so that we cannot make amendments and so that our debate is limited.

But let me tell you, I really object to this kind of duplicitous conduct where you say you are putting an amendment in to take things out and then you bring an additional $1.9 billion worth of spending, dozens of items the committee never held hearings on, much less had a chance to discuss informally.

Mr. Chairman, there is no way this amendment should pass the House, and if it does, it will wreak ultimate disgrace on the process and those who serve it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will note that the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] does not have any time remaining. What does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] wish to do with his time?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, we have been interested to hear over the last few minutes about the $1.9 billion in spending that has gotten into the bill, it was there because it was assumed in the summit.

Well, there are several other things that were assumed in the summit too that did not make it in. There just happened to be $3 billion in entitlement cuts that were never reconciled to any committee and nothing was ever done about them.

In other words, when it comes to spending $1.9 billion, the majority says that is assumed in the summit and so therefore we are going to bring it to the floor in this kind of a hurry-up manner. But when it comes to cuts, when it comes to spending cuts, those did not even get assigned to any committee despite the fact that they were agreed upon by the summit.

Now, that is precisely what we have been saying here all day: When it comes to spending, the Democrats will waive any rule in the world, will lie, cheat, and steal in order to try to get the measure out here. When it comes to spending cuts, they will not take any action that necessitates making those cuts real. That is exactly what is happening here again.

Vote down this crazy amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I am concerned about the government-sponsored enterprises, the GSE's such as: Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and Sally Mae.

The committee chairman has said his amendment would strip out language regarding GSE's in this bill. I am told there is one section left.

I want to remind the House that the activities of these government-sponsored enterprises result in both implicit and explicit liabilities for the Federal Government.

We have over $900 billion in potential liabilities as a result of the activities of GSE's. All that is left in this bill, as I see it, is a vague requirement that the committees of jurisdiction will look at this situation. You will wait till hell freezes over next year before the Committee on Agriculture, or the Committee on Education and Labor, or the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs report anything worthwhile on GSE's.

I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that there is some arrangement whereby meaningful GSE reform will be kept in the bill. I would like for the committee to give me the assurance.

Can the gentlemen from California or Minnesota, members of the committee, give me that assurance?

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENZEL moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chariman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I have discoursed enough on this amendment, and I think it has disrupted whatever comity at least I thought might have existed prior to the introduction of this amendment.

I supported the introduction of this amendment as it was described in the Committee on Rules, and it has been used, I think, to subvert and defile the process by adding items that were never intended by any committee of this House, never voted on by any committee of this House, added extra spending to a bill in which we are telling the taxpayers of this country that we are reducing spending, and here we are bombing some more on them.

This amendment has made an abomination out of that process.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would notify the gentleman from Minnesota that he must use his 5 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for his warning.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the gentleman's position.

Mr. Chairman, this Nation is governed by a Constitution. That Constitution provides for three branches of Government. Our branch of Government is made up of representatives of the people and the way that whole representative process works is that we represent the needs of our people in the committee debate and through our discussion we come to an understanding of what the impact of changes in the law will be on our people, not on our process here, not on the political ambitions of individuals, but on people's lives.

Now, the provisions in these amendments have been discussed in my subcommittee, in part, in small part, but they have not been discussed for the most part.

We cannot tell even whether our urban hospitals are going to be helped or hurt by some of the things that are being done, and we cannot tell in these provisions what their impact will be specifically on our communities and the people we represent, and that is wrong, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support for the gentleman's motion.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the gentleman from Minnesota's motion.

Mr. Chairman, it is very sad to me that here we are, having gone through months of deliberation as to how to reach a budget agreement and here at the final moment we are presented with a multipage document of which there has been no prior explanation. This is the type of thing that has gotten us into so much trouble in years gone by where voluminous documents hit the floor the last minute before we are to adjourn or before we are to do something extremely important for this country.

I think it is time for us to count to a legislative 10 and to support the gentleman's motion to rise so that we will have an opportunity to look at this and to come back in a more thoughtful way.

But certainly, adding more spending to a bill that is already too loaded with spending is not the direction to go.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BATEMAN].

Mr. BATEMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, like my colleague from Minnesota, I am very disturbed about what it is we are undertaking to do. It represents the worst of that which is making my constituents and the people of America very, very concerned about how this Congress operates.

I am here representing my constituents and entitled to certain things whether or not I be in the minority or the majority. If I am conscientious, if I work hard, if I want to know that which is before me and to frame my votes on their behalf intelligently, how dare you bring things that I, no one, no matter how conscientious, even knows what is included in them or what they are all about?

You do it in a context where this Government will close down at midnight Friday. We played the "break-in-the-crisis" game again, and that is a game we can ill afford to play.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that the additional Medicare provision from the Committee on Ways and Means be stricken from the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, which matter? I want to make sure we do not get any more games played on us. Is it the entire package? Let us get down to pages and titles.

Mr. PANETTA. What I would do is move to strike everything after page 2 that includes from sections 9001 on to the end of the amendment.

Mr. GRADISON. Further reserving the right to object, does this include section 12901?

Mr. PANETTA. That is correct.

Mr. GRADISON. 12902?

Mr. PANETTA. That is correct.

Mr. GRADISON. 12903, 12904, 12905, 12906, 12907, 12911, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, as well as section 12931, 32, 33, and 34?

□ 2040

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct. Those are the provisions from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, this is precisely the unanimous-consent request that I made a few moments ago which was objected to by the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] tell us what will be left?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, what would be left then is the base amendments which would strike the 24 items from the various committees that I indicated before and that the majority leader also indicated would be stripped from the bill.

Mr. FRENZEL. OK; so that strikes subtitle H and all that follows thereafter.

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] is correct.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the history that we have heard just now, what are the 24 that are left? The Members do not know, and the gentleman has not given us any information.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. For the Members I have explained all of the items that we have stripped from the bill. That includes the GSE, the Education and Labor area, and the Public Works area, and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries area. All of those are the areas that would then be stripped from the bill. This would be a basic amendment that would go to the extraneous issues in the bill.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I was going to reserve on my own because, is what the gentleman is asking for is to include the stricken provisions having to do with the GSE's?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, the only thing I am asking that we would strip are the provisions that were included in the amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means related to Medicare. Everything else would remain.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gesture and intend to vote for the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Does the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] mean the GSE provision will remain in the bill?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GONZALEZ. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. No, Mr. Chairman, they will be stricken as the amendment provided for. The GSE provisions from the Committee on Ways and Means, from banking, and currency and from agriculture will be stricken under the amendment. The other provisions will be stricken as we presented and as we included in the amendment. The only thing I am asking to be stripped here is the provisions that came in on Medicare. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA]?

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. Chairman, I want the assurance from the gentleman because I am trying my best to understand. He says this one section, subtitle B, is still left in the measure. He has struck out the GSE with respect to the committees of jurisdiction. Essentially what this title does is simply say that the committee of jurisdiction should act by next September. We have no assurance that he can make them act. They are not going to act unless somehow between now and the time we finish this bill they have the chance to——

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, we cannot have three or four authorizing committees coming up with separate GSE language that treats GSE's differently. What we need to rely on is the GSE provisions that are contained in the budget reforms budget process, agreed to by the summit, that are contained in the base bill. That is why we have stripped out the other GSE bill.

Mr. PICKLE. Then, Mr. Chairman, if it is kept in the base bill, we still have a chance to get the proper wording in the conference on this——

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as I understand what has been done by agreement, certain provisions, which were extraneous and added to the bill, have been eliminated. There was also a very important function that the gentleman's motion, as I understood it, or amendment, was supposed to perform, and that was to take out of the bill extraneous things which were in it, in the agreement and all of the sections that have been eliminated. Have any of those provisions been taken out of the bill that were originally in it? Like the labor law changes that were mentioned?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATEMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, the same thing we were going to strip pursuant to the amendment remain in the amendment. In other words, we are going to strip all of the provisions that I indicated we would strip with the exception of the addition of the Medicare provision. That is all I am asking that we take out of the amendment.

Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman, "Are you taking out of the bill the provision dealing with labor law and the making of policy in that area which is not a part of reconciliation?"

Mr. PANETTA. No.

Mr. BATEMAN. They remain then in the bill?

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BATEMAN] is correct because they provide savings, I might say to the gentleman.

Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will not object, but I cannot let the opportunity escape to say that this is a shoddy way for our business to be transacted.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I have a unanimous-consent request pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am not clear with regard to a comment made by the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA]

Am I correct that all of subtitle H is to be stricken? There are a number of other Ways and Means items beyond the numbers which I read already.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRADISON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON] is correct. It is just the items that I referred to in the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. GRADISON. Beginning with section 12701?

Mr. PANETTA. Nothing is added to the Ways and Means title.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] answer a question?

Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman be clear as to what he is stripping from his motion and not from the bill? Let us confine it to child care. What is the situation again with respect to child care? Is the gentleman stripping the bill——

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield,

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, with regard to every other element, including the stripping of the child care bill, that would remain in the amendment to do that.

Mr. HAWKINS. In the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] is correct.

Mr. HAWKINS. So that in effect the effect of the amendment then would be to eliminate the child care bill that was submitted to the Committee on Rules. Is that the situation?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, the leadership has made a commitment that there will be a child care bill. There is pending a child care conference. The only concern was having this added to reconciliation. That was the concern, and that is why we are stripping it.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, that is not my concern. My concern is that what the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is doing is stripping the Child Care Program completely from the package because he says that it is going to be handled in a separate bill. The other body has it in the reconciliation package. That is going to decide what happens to it. Now the gentleman is stripping the bill from the package, and so in effect he is eliminating the House bill which was passed in the House.

Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] deny that that is not the situation?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, again we have passed on the House side the child care bill, both the bill of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], as well as the bill of the Committee on Ways and Means. My understanding is that that is in conference, that the gentleman is conferencing those issues, and to add it now as an additional element to reconciliation we feel does not only involve no savings in terms of reconciliation, but complicates the reconciliation process.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand regular order. The questions going on have nothing to do with the request made by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there an objection to the modification as proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA]?

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give us an answer? Is he saying that the issue is going to be handled?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been an objection.

Mr. HAWKINS. May I ask again, please?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I renew my unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there an objection to the modification?

□ 2050

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, until I get an answer.

The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is saying it is stripped from reconciliation. The gentleman says it is in conference. It was in conference. Both Houses agreed on it in conference. Yet it was not allowed on the House side in the conference report.

If we are in conference and could vote on the conference report, that would settle it. But we are not in that position. That is why we added that in the matter which we submitted to the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules kept it in. The motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] would strike it out.

If you strike it out, you have stricken it then from consideration, from House consideration completely on the issue.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, could we have regular order? The objection has nothing to do with the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, let me reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The gentleman is concerned that somehow his rights would be lost, if in fact, on the other side child care was to be included in the reconciliation bill.

My understanding is that there is a conference going on, and that the full rights of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] in that conference would be protected, so that he could defend the version passed by the House, and also that the Committee on Ways and Means would also be able to defend the version passed by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Chairman, we have got conflicting issues that are in conference now. We do not feel that reconciliation is the place to fight the battle on child care.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, it is not in conference. Members should understand it is not in conference. The only thing pertaining to child care is in reconciliation on the other side. We have nothing on this side with which to go to conference.

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Chairman, the point I would make is that the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] deals only with the subject of Medicare in the Committee on Ways and Means. It does not in any way affect the concern of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] with respect to child care. That issue is involved with the underlying amendments.

So if we allow the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] his unanimous-consent request, then the question that the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] has is relevant.

Mr. HAWKINS. Reclaiming my time, it is relevant with respect to the way we are going to vote.

Mr. SLATTERY. If the gentleman will yield further, it is not relevant on the unanimous-consent request. It will be relevant with respect to the underlying amendment.

Mr. HAWKINS. Reclaiming my time, the gentleman is denying the child care issue from being in the package. If I withdraw my reservation, what assurance do I have that child care will indeed be considered as has been said?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKINS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, my understanding from the leadership is that the full rights of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] with regard to the provision that he has sponsored on child care will be protected by the leadership.

Mr. HAWKINS. Reclaiming my time, even to the extent that the House will be in a position to name conferees in reconciliation on this issue?

Mr. PANETTA. If the gentleman will yield further, my understanding is that the full rights of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] with regard to the child care provision, if the Senate includes a similar provision, would be protected in conference.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the modification?

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not want to object, but I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], on the provisions of the Committee on Ways and Means, which is one of the reasons that some Members felt strongly about supporting this bill, are you striking the Medicare no-cost provisions, which list everything from nurse-anesthesia fees to Medigap standards, and is the House going to cut for the second time the mammography coverage, which in the first year costs zero, and would save money and lives?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. OAKAR. I would be delighted to yield to the gentleman from California. I am going to object if the gentleman is.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, we are not striking anything in the base bill that was added by the Committee on Ways and Means relative to Medicare. We are only striking the addition that would be provided pursuant to this amendment.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I want to call on the leadership to give me a commitment that when you fellows, all fellows, go into conference, because you did this before in the wee hours 2 years ago, so do not go "Oh," a lot of people are dead because we did not have coverage which saves money and lives in terms of screening.

I want to know whether this is going to be in as part of the negotiation. Is it not time we get a little progressive and try to do something that is productive and will save money? I want to know whether the Medicare initiatives, which are excellent, and I want to commend the Committee on Ways and Means, it does not even cost a lot.

Mr. Chairman, I am not trying to give Members an undue hard time, but I will not stand for this happening again. I am just telling Members that is the way I feel about it.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. OAKAR. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] that we obviously would like to keep these in the bill. That is why we asked for $4 billion in the summit agreement for the cushioning of the blow of the Medicare cuts. It is my understanding, that some of the provisions that are provided in here, are not in conference in the Senate. I am not exactly clear on which ones are.

I would say to the gentlewoman, that we would go to conference with the Committee on Ways and Means with the effort to try to find and save as much as we could to cushion the blow of the Medicare and Medicaid cuts.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], as I look at some of these initiatives, some of them cost zero, including for the first year mammography coverage. I would question some of the other figures here. There are other provisions that do not cost anything.

Mr. Chairman, why do we have to cut that? Why can we not go into conference with those provisions?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. OAKAR. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I think some of these provisions are going to be included on the finance side. Obviously they will be subject to full conference with regard to the Medicare provision.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, who will fight for the provisions I just mentioned? I am not part of that, and none of the female Members are in this body.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlewoman will continue to yield, I do not think there is any question but that the leadership and certainly I, and I think the Committee on Ways and Means, will fight for the same goals that the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] has expressed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] still press his preferential motion?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, was the unanimous-consent request approved?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, it has been.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back all time under my motion and under the Panetta amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments en bloc, as modified, offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

The amendments en bloc, as modified, were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

□ 2100

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. KILDEE] having assumed the chair, Mr. MAVROULES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5835) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 4 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1991, pursuant to House Resolution 509, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 227, nays 203, not voting 3, as follows:

NOT VOTING—3

Michel	Rowland (CT)	Thomas (CA)

□ 2118

Mr. HERGER changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Ms. OAKAR, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. ECKART, and Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 5835, OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1990

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 5835, as amended, the Clerk be authorized to correct section numbers, cross-references, punctuation, and grammatical and spelling errors, to correct the title and table of contents, and to make such clerical, technical, conforming, and other changes as may be necessary to reflect the actions of the House in amending the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous matter on H.R. 5835, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman for California,

There was no objection.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5399, LEGISLATIVE BRANCH APPROPRIATION, 1991

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 101-890) on the resolution (H. Res. 510) waiving certain points of order during consideration of the bill (H.R. 5399) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF S. 2924, FEDERAL FISH INSPECTION ACT

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 101-891) on the resolution (H. Res. 511) providing for the consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2924) to expand the meat inspection programs of the United States by establishing a comprehensive inspection program to ensure the quality and wholesomeness of all fish products intended for human consumption in the United States and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 5803, DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1991

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5803) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees, and without objection, the Chair reserves the right to appoint additional conferees: Messrs. MURTHA, DICKS, WILSON, HEFNER, AUCOIN, SABO, DIXON, WHITTEN, MCDADE, YOUNG of Florida, MILLER of Ohio, LIVINGSTON, and CONTE.

There was no objection.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION CONCERNING FURLOUGHED EMPLOYEES' PAY

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I have just introduced House Joint Resolution 671. The purpose of that resolution is to ensure that those employees, who, through no fault of their own, were laid off over the Columbus Day holiday will be paid. I have introduced that bill on behalf of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], the ranking member, as well as other Members of the House of Representatives.

I very much regret, Mr. Speaker, that I wanted to rise and ask that by unanimous consent we pass that bill last Friday. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I could not get approval for that unanimous-consent request. That is unfortunate because again this week, in just 72 hours, we will come up against that brick wall again, and what will we do? We will place the morale and the sense of security of Federal employees and their families at risk. That is unfair. We ought not to do it. We should have had unanimous consent to pass that resolution.

No person in this House on either side of the aisle wants to undermine the morale and security of Federal employees. My good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] talked to me about the resolution. I regret that we were not able to move forward. Now, some ask for an amendment on the bill that we just passed, reconciliation. It was not allowed by the Committee on Rules, as being extraneous to the bill, but asked for an amendment. All Members of the other side of the aisle who are strong supporters of the interest of Federal employees with whom I joined together, and they asked for such an amendment.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that we were not able to pass that resolution by unanimous consent, but I want to say that I think on both sides of the aisle it is our clear intent that Federal employees, through no fault of their own who may be laid off this coming weekend, will be reimbursed, their families will be kept secure, and they will not be placed in jeopardy.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FAZIO. Is it the gentleman's understanding that today the majority was attacked for not allowing such a resolution to proceed in a press conference that was held by some other Members of this body?

Mr. HOYER. There were some Members who had a press conference, complaining about that incident. They did not tell me about the press conference, although I talked to them about the joint resolution that I introduced, on which most of their names, perhaps save but one exception, appear.

Mr. FAZIO. I can understand the gentleman would be concerned if there were some confusion created by that press appearance, and I certainly can understand the frustration he feels, and strongly support his efforts.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I join the distinguished gentleman from my State of Maryland in supporting the resolution because, of course, there was an inequity. There is no reason why Federal employees should suffer because Congress and the administration have not appropriately acted.

With regard to the press conference today, it was three Members from this side of the aisle, purposefully done, to ask the President, to urge the President to sign, if necessary, a continuing resolution so we do not have a repeat of what the gentleman is referring to. Namely, that Federal employees suddenly find that they are going to be furloughed, and that Government comes to a stop. We feel that the services to all people would then suffer.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her strong support of the interest of Federal employees.

(On request of Mr. DICKS and by unanimous consent, Mr. HOYER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

□ 2130

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], the cosponsor of the resolution.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to briefly state that I commend the gentleman for bringing this measure up. We certainly do not want to balance the budget on the backs of our Federal employees, and I thank the gentleman for bringing this measure to the floor at this time.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I want to reiterate that I think this is a bipartisan feeling. I made that point. I think it is regrettable that we have not moved ahead by unanimous consent, but nevertheless I think it is a bipartisan feeling.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that representing thousands of employees on the west coast of this country, we are just as concerned about this. I commend the gentleman for his leadership.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his cosponsorship of this resolution and his strong leadership in this area.

I thank the Speaker once again.

COMMEMORATING 200TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE POLISH CONSTITUTION

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 669) to salute and congratulate the people of Poland as they commemorate the 200th anniversary of the adoption of the Polish Constitution on May 3, 1991, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I take this time, first of all to inform the Chair that we have in excess of 20 commemoratives, so we will be reserving our right to object for quite a bit over the next hour.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE]. The gentleman is the sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from the bottom of my heart for his courtesy.

I also want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], who was one of my first cosponsors.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution, which commemorates the bicentennial of the Polish Constitution of 1791. By passing it, we recall a central event in the history of Poland, the history of Europe, and in the development of democracy worldwide. It is an important resolution, and I hope my colleagues will give it their vote and their full support. Until the 18th century, Poland was governed by monarchs and aristocrats. Its parliamentary system, introduced hundreds of years earlier, reflected the feudal nobility of the kingdom rather than the majority of its people.

In the 1780's, however, with the influence of Enlightenment thought and the American Revolution, the inequities of the feudal system became evident to all. Influenced by Polish soldiers like Tadeusz Kosciuszko, who had returned from their service with the Continental * * * Army in the American Revolution, the "Great Polish Parliament" of 1788 enacted a set of legal reforms. The greatest of these, and the one which made an eternal impression on Poland's history and people, was the Constitution we honor today. This document, adopted on May 3, 1791, was the first liberal constitution in Europe and the second in the world after our own. Its basic principle is embodied in these words: "All power in civil society should be derived from the will of the people, * * * Its end and object being the preservation and integrity of the State, the civil liberty and good order of society, on an equal scale and on a lasting foundation."

The Constitution established an elected government similar in many ways to that of the United States, with executive, legislative, and judicial branches. It abolished feudal privileges, gave all citizens the right to vote, and guaranteed the people's right to freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and freedom of religion. Both idealistic and effective, the Constitution established Poland as Europe's first true democracy. Its admirers included Thomas Jefferson himself, who left us two copies of it as part of the original Library of Congress.

The Constitutional era was cut sadly short. Poland was a small country, bordered by the powerful states of Russia, Austria, and Prussia.

And by 1795, despite heroic resistance by Polish nobles and peasants alike, Poland was partitioned.

The country lost its independence for more than 120 years. But throughout that time the Constitution of 1791 remained a guide and an inspiration to the people of Poland and their friends abroad.

In his speech to the joint session of Congress last November, Lech Walesa said the Solidarity movement's work was dedicated "to the service of this idea: government of the people, by the people, for the people. Against privilege and monopoly, against violations of the law, against the trampling of human dignity, against contempt and injustice." The same idealism inspired the authors of the Polish Constitution of 1791 and the authors of the American Constitution of 1787.

For over 200 years, our Constitution has bound together immigrants from every country in the world, and sustained us through civil war, expansion westward, Depression and World Wars. And likewise, the principles of Poland's Constitution remained a guide and a source of hope to the Poles through partition, war, Nazi occupation, and Marxist oppression.

Enshrined by the Constitution of 1791, those principles glow all the brighter today. Poland's government and people are struggling to rebuild a prosperous market economy and establish a democracy. They have disagreements, as is inevitable, but as they were 200 years ago, they are united today in their commitment to the good of their nation. They are completing a task which began long ago, and they deserve our applause and our assistance.

This resolution recalls the birth of Poland's democracy. It recognizes the idealism of those who fought for it 200 years ago, and it salutes the Polish people who are winning it today. It reaffirms a friendship which began with the American Revolution and is stronger than ever today, and I ask my colleagues to give it their enthusiastic support.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my friend from Pittsfield for giving me the privilege to join as a cosponsor of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is obviously a very, very appropriate time for us to be recognizing this 1791 Polish Constitution, because today we are seeing the interdependence of Poland and the United States of America.

We are at a point where the people of Poland have been looking to the United States of America for direction and we have often looked to Poland.

My frustration as we look at this budget process that we just went through is now that we have seen the Polish people move dramatically toward a free market process, we may if we do not change the policies here in the United States of America, have to look to Poland as an economic model for the United States.

It is important for us to recognize that the people of Poland have provided tremendous inspiration to the world.

Passage of this bill is a priority which I hope all of our colleagues will support.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of House Joint Resolution 669 which salutes and congratulates the people of Poland as they commemorate their 200th anniversary of the adoption of the Polish Constitution on May 3, 1991. I would like to take this opportunity to commend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for sponsoring this measure.

In 1791, the people of Poland designed their Constitution to replace the oppressive feudal system of rule with a government of three distinct powers. Like our own Constitution, the Constitution of Poland secures individual freedom and religious tolerance—protecting national unity—while declaring that "All power in civil society should be derived from the will of the people."

The principles of the Constitution of Poland have survived the past 200 years despite economic strife and war. Its endurance is a reflection of Poland's national consciousness. Providing many economic, social and political reforms, the Constitution expanded the rights of every citizen of Poland. Mr. Speaker, we Americans understand the value of a Constitution and we applaud the people of Poland during this time of celebration for the insight our forefathers shared. Let us join together with the people of Poland during this commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the adoption of its Constitution on May 2, 1991, and recognize the rebirth of Poland as a free nation. As the light of freedom grows brighter and brighter in Eastern Europe, we should stand united and salute their efforts toward a free world.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding to me, and again I thank everybody for their good work on this commemorative, and especially my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

I just wanted to add two little historical facts about this Polish Constitution. The gentleman said that the inspiration was Tadeusz Kosciuszko. I am not saying it was the correct Polish pronunciation. I am giving it the old American phonetic pronunciation; because Kosciuszko lent his name to two fighter squadrons, one in 1919 where American pilots tried to return the favor of this young Polish hero who came and fought for our independence, a century and a quarter later flew against the Bolsheviks to help Poland retain and get its freedom in 1919.

A few years later and we are celebrating the 50th anniversary of that, the Polish young pilots and their commander, who escaped from Poland in 1939, flew in the Battle of Britain, 50 years ago this summer, and up through October 31 of this month was still in that 2½-month commemorative period.

And the 303d RAF squadron was called the Tadeusz Kosciuszko Squadron, and it achieved the highest number of air victories against the Nazi Luftwaffe, 2 to 1 over the next closest British squadron, the 249th squadron. They shot down 126 airplanes in the Battle of Britain under the name of that great Polish hero Kosciuszko.

So the history that you have in this resolution—and I hope you will put me on it immediately if I am not on it already—is great, that you brought this to the attention of the Congress, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, with that thoughtful history lesson, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 669

Whereas the Polish Constitution of 1791 was designed to protect Poland's sovereignty and national unity, and replaced a feudal system of rule in Poland with a progressive constitutional monarchy;

Whereas the Polish Constitution secured individual freedom for all persons in Poland and guaranteed religious tolerance by assuring "to all persuasions and religions freedom and liberty", and formed a government composed of three distinct powers: Legislative, Executive, and Judicial, while declaring that "all power in civil society should be derived from the will of the people";

Whereas the Polish Constitution revitalized the parliamentary system by placing preeminent lawmaking power in a House of Deputies, by subjecting the legislative Diet to majority rule, and by granting the Diet the power to remove ministers, appoint commissars, and choose magistrates;

Whereas the Polish Constitution provided for significant economic, social, and political reforms for its time by removing inequalities between the nobility and bourgeois, recognizing town residents as "freemen" that had judicial autonomy and expended rights, and extending the protection of law to the peasantry, which previously had no recourse against the arbitrary action of feudal lords; and

Whereas the principles of the Polish Constitution endured and became the symbol around which a powerful new national consciousness was born, helping the Polish nation to survive long periods of misfortune over the next two centuries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the people of the United States of America salute and congratulate the people of Poland as they commemorate the two-hundredth anniversary of the adoption of the Polish Constitution on May 3, 1991, and recognize that Poland's rebirth as a free nation is supported by the legacy of the Polish Constitution of 1791;

SEC. 2. The Library of Congress is authorized and directed to commemorate this anniversary with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

SEC. 3. The President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the Governors of the several States, the chief officials of local governments, and the people of the United States to observe the anniversary with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL RADON ACTION WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 317) to designate the week of October 14, 1990, through October 20, 1990, as "National Radon Action Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 317

Whereas exposure to radon poses a serious threat to the health of the people of this Nation;

Whereas the Environmental Protection Agency estimates that lung cancer attributable to radon exposure causes approximately twenty thousand deaths a year in the United States;

Whereas the United States has set a long-term national goal of making the air inside buildings as free of radon as the ambient air;

Whereas excessively high levels of radon in homes and schools can be reduced successfully and economically with appropriate treatment;

Whereas only about 2 percent of the homes in this Nation have been tested for radon levels;

Whereas the people of this Nation should be educated about the dangers of exposure to radon; and

Whereas people should be encouraged to conduct tests for radon in their homes and schools and to make the repairs required to reduce excessive radon levels: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 14, 1990, through October 20, 1990, is designated as "National Radon Action Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of National Radon Action Week—a week of increased public attention and education surrounding the serious health risks of radon, which runs from October 14 to 20, 1990.

Less gripping than hazardous waste dump sites or acid rain, radon poses an even greater threat to our health than either of those environmental problems. As the second leading cause of lung cancer in the United States, the Environmental Protection Agency estimates that radon is responsible for 31,000 deaths each year.

Some 21,000 deaths each year from an environmental problem which costs, on average, a few hundred dollars to fix.

Some 21,000 lung cancer deaths each year that could be avoided without anyone having to go through the long and difficult process of quitting smoking.

With a relatively inexpensive and painless way of addressing such a serious health threat, why do we need a week of public awareness? The answer lies in the nature of the radon problem: A naturally occurring, invisible, odorless gas that seeps into our homes and causes long term health problems years later. The problem must be addressed at the initiative of the individual homeowner, who usually chooses to focus on more immediate problems like fixing the leaking roof.

On Monday, the Environmental Protection Agency began a week of innovative events designed to raise public awareness of radon's threat to their families. Three million schoolchildren will receive information on radon, as will 400,000 doctors through their local chapters of the American Medical Association. Press conferences will be held across the country, and companies such as AT&T kick off employees awareness programs. In the Northeastern States, bumper stickers will remind people to test their homes for radon this week.

Yet as we encourage people to test for radon and mitigate the problem in their homes, we must not overlook the importance of Government action in certifying and regulating the radon testing industry. How many people can evaluate the accuracy of a radon test on their own? It seems only logical to set some Federal standards in an area where consumers can not possibly make individual choices based on their own knowledge and observations.

So as we begin this week of radon awareness, and focus on the critical role of public education in attacking this problem, let us not forget the importance of Government action to protect consumers once they have made the decision to mitigate radon in their homes. Specifically, companies offering radon testing products and services should be required to meet accuracy standards established by the Environmental Protection Agency. I strongly support these certification requirements as a necessary safeguard for consumers.

In our schools and work places, more attention is needed to address the problem of radon. Children are particularly vulnerable to the health threats of radon, and may be exposed daily to elevated levels in their schools. Testing and mitigation of school buildings should be a priority.

Finally, we need to find ways of speeding up this process of discovering and mitigating radon. Calls for public action have produced extremely disappointing results, with only a tiny fraction of homeowners testing and a smaller fraction taking action to correct the problem in their homes. Clearly, public service announcements and ad campaigns must be augmented with direct Government action to address this serious health threat.

It is my hope that this week of public awareness will lead to a renewed and stronger commitment on the part of Government agencies, members of the housing industry, health officials, the media, and the public to reduce radon levels across the country and to find new and innovative ways of encouraging people to act on this problem. The impressive level of creativity and hard work put into Radon Action Week by these groups is an excellent step toward a more successful and far-reaching radon policy for our Nation, and I commend them for their efforts.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, as the original sponsor of House Joint Resolution 583, commemorating this week of October 14–20 as National Radon Action Week, to urge the passage of this legislation. I am pleased to have over 200 of my colleagues as cosponsors.

With this resolution, recently adopted by the Senate, we are increasing the awareness of the problem of radon and urging Americans to have their homes, schools and workplaces tested. Although radon is a problem throughout the country, my home State of New Jersey has reported some of the highest levels of radon in the Nation. Twenty thousand people die each year from exposure to radon in dwellings, according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Radon is a naturally occurring gas, is second only to smoking as a cause of lung cancer in the Nation. Radon can be so deadly that the Environmental Protection Agency and the Surgeon General have strongly recommended that all homes be tested for radon, except residences above the second floor in multilevel buildings. Alarming as these statistics are, the problem can be readily and cheaply solved through simple testing and mitigation. Nevertheless, less than 10 percent of U.S. homes have been tested so far.

Radon invades your home from the surrounding soil. In some cases, well water can be a source of radon. Once inside, radon is completely invisible to sight, smell, or taste. Radon can accumulate to dangerously high levels. In fact, as you breathe in radon, its decay products become trapped inside your lungs. As these products continue to decay, they release small bursts of energy which can damage lung tissue and lead to lung cancer. It's like exposing your family to hundreds of chest x rays each year.

The EPA conducts the Radon Measure Proficiency [RMP] Program to evaluate companies that make and analyze radon test kits. Therefore, to ensure that you get accurate results, look for test kits from companies that have successfully completed the EPA proficiency program. State radon offices also have a list of all radon measurement companies that are State or EPA approved.

Your family's risk of developing lung cancer from radon depends on the average annual level of radon in your home, and the amount of time they're exposed to it. Obviously, the longer your exposure, or the higher the level of radon in your home, the greater the risk. That is why it is so important that your home be tested, immediately. Testing, as I stated earlier, is simple and inexpensive. The risk involved if you don't test is great. So the sooner you test your home, the sooner you can take appropriate action.

In the Northeast, radon levels are dangerously high in many areas; so EPA strongly recommends that all homeowners protect their property and health by testing for radon. If homeowners have questions they may contact State radon offices as well as EPA's toll free number 1-800-SOS-RADON.

We cannot deny the health risks that radon imposes. I am convinced of the need for each of us to test our homes. Considering the impact that radon may have on our lives, I am proud to be associated with this important effort, and I encourage each of you to join in support of this resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL RICE MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 353) to designate September of 1991 as "National Rice Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution as follows:

S.J. RES. 353

Whereas rice is the staple grain for two-thirds of the population of the World, and the significance of rice cannot be overemphasized;

Whereas 8 out of 10 people in the World depend on rice for 40 percent of their energy needs;

Whereas rice is the fifth most valuable food crop in this Nation, as rice represents a two-billion dollar cash crop, and is vital to the economic stability of rice farmers and millers in Arkansas, California, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Missouri, and Florida;

Whereas intense research and development in rice technology has resulted in approximately 12 percent of the rice production in the World being carried out on only 2 percent of the available acreage for such production by rice farmers in this Nation, making such rice one of the most land-efficient and cost-efficient crops grown;

Whereas the United States is one of the largest exporters of rice, as this Nation exports rice to over 120 countries and supplies about 20 percent of the rice for world trade;

Whereas wild rice, the only cereal grain to be domesticated from a wild crop in the United States, is a growing segment of the rice industry and is important to the communities where it is grown;

Whereas wild rice is gaining popularity among consumers as an individual dish and in combinations with other rices;

Whereas millions of people in this Nation, as well as countless people in other countries, enjoy rice in a variety of forms, including the use of rice as an edible grain, in flour, bran, cooking oil, cereals, rice cakes, and health food snacks;

Whereas the people of this Nation consume an average of approximately 18 pounds of rice per person per year, an amount that represents twice the per capita consumption of rice 30 years ago;

Whereas rice is an important source of nutritional value, as rice provides an excellent source of complex carbohydrates, contains only a trace of fat, and is cholesterol-free and sodium-free;

Whereas scientists are now beginning to uncover the benefits of rice bran and rice bran oil in lowering the levels of cholesterol in humans;

Whereas new knowledge of the nutritional benefits of the rice kernel and the recent health consciousness of the people of this Nation is producing a growing appreciation of rice by such people;

Whereas rice is recognized worldwide as an economical food and an important part of feeding the expanding population in Third World nations;

Whereas rice provides an important contribution to the diet, to the economy of this Nation, and to the nourishment of other countries; and

Whereas the harvest of rice in this Nation is celebrated each September: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That September of 1991 is designated as "National Rice Month", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support my bill to establish National Rice Month. The establishment of National Rice Month will help promote this important industry.

Rice has been grown in North America since the colonization of the Carolinas in the 17th century. In 1696, an improved variety of rice, reportedly from Madagascar, was first grown on the Carolina coast, and the American rice industry began in earnest.

From the beginning, American rice was well suited for the export trade. By 1726, the Port of Charleston exported about 4,500 metric tons of rice annually. Over the next 4 years, that figure doubled.

By the time of independence, 50 years later, rice was one of America's agricultural export giants. America was already a fairly sophisticated trading nation, and rice moved expeditiously from farmer to agent to shipper.

Over the years, rice became less and less important to the Carolinas. Cotton and tobacco were better suited to the Carolina climate. Coastal plantations lost entire crops due to hurricanes. Finally, in the 1860's, advancing Union armies put many of the great rice plantations to the torch. The end of the war brought the end of slavery, on which much of the Carolina rice industry was dependent and because of which it was doomed.

Rice was not forgotten in America, however. Before the turn of the 20th century hardy settlers found that the rich, loamy soils of the newly cleared Mississippi Delta bottomlands and the gulf coast of Texas and Louisiana were uniquely suited to rice production.

Shortly before 1900, German immigrants came to Arkansas' Grand Prairie and founded the city of Stuttgart. It wasn't long before they took up cultivation of the new crop.

Robert Bennett helped them. Bennett was director of the Arkansas Agricultural Experiment Station from 1891 to 1903, and, as Stephen Strausberg points out in his recent centennial history of the station, Bennett was an advocate of alternative crops and diversification—issues that to this day remain on the front burner of Arkansas agriculture.

In 1903, as Strausberg tells it, the Ag Experiment Station requested help from the Arkansas Department of Irrigation and Drainage in developing irrigation methods for Arkansas rice. The experiment station introduced two new varieties of rice, one from Japan and one from Honduras, that were extremely helpful to the commercialization of rice farming in Arkansas.

At the same time, rice was emerging as a significant crop in California. By 1856, the new State of California included in its population some 40,000 Chinese, whose staple food was rice. California rice production began to meet the demand of these immigrants for rice. The first commercial crop of short-grain rice, which is the variety favored throughout Asia, was grown in California in 1912.

From these beginnings, rice has over the years returned to the prominence in American agriculture that it had in colonial times.

Rice is the fifth most valuable cash crop in the Nation, producing farm-gate income of more than $2 billion a year. The First Congressional District of Arkansas, which I am privileged to represent, produces more rice than any other State. But rice is also very important to the economies of California, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, and Missouri.

And, after nearly three centuries of moving westward with the growth of the Nation, rice production is beginning to move East again. Rice is now being grown and milled in Florida, and the Florida rice industry is expected to do quite well in the coming years.

The United States is one of only two or three major players in the world rice market. We export rice to more than 120 countries, and supply 20 percent of the rice in world trade. Our rice exports are smaller than those of Thailand, but bigger than those of Vietnam.

A health-conscious public is increasingly turning to rice as a tasty and healthy alternative to other dishes. Rice is an excellent source of complex carbohydrates. It contains only a trace of fat, and it contains no sodium and no cholesterol.

Consumers know this. The people of the United States consume approximately 18 pounds of rice per person per year. That's about twice as much as the per capita consumption of rice in 1960.

What's more, scientists have found indications that rice bran and rice bran oil actually lower cholesterol levels.

In September and October of each year, when harvest is complete and before thoughts turn completely to football and duck season, the people of rice country still take time to celebrate the harvest and celebrate rice at festivals and events like the Arkansas Rice Festival in Weiner, AR.

The U.S. rice industry will continue to grow, and prosper, as long as people continue to be aware of the superior quality of rice and rice products available in their grocery stores. We think "National Rice Month" will help achieve this goal.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EATING DISORDERS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 214) designating the week of October 23 through October 29, 1989, as "Eating Disorders Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so simply to acknowledge the work of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Joint Resolution 214, legislation which I introduced to designate the week of October 22–28, 1990, as "Eating Disorders Awareness Week."

Eating disorders such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia have reached epidemic proportions in the United States, posing a serious risk to the mental and physical well-being of thousands of young women and men. It is estimated that over 3 million women between the ages of 12 and 40 suffer from this type of disorder, and an increasing number of men have been seeking treatment for these potentially life-threatening diseases.

Despite these statistics, however, in many cases, the symptoms of anorexia and bulimia often go unrecognized. Such was the case with my cousin's daughter Cecily. Cecily developed anorexia nervosa at age 15, and for 1 full year, it went undiagnosed. After suffering bulimic complications and severe depression, she was finally hospitalized and underwent a 4-year struggle.

Fortunately, she is now married and has a healthy 3-year-old son. But the suffering of Cecily and her family would have been far less if the symptoms had been recognized earlier. That is where "Eating Disorders Awareness Week" can help. During this week, concerned individuals and groups in 37 States and 7 foreign countries will focus their efforts on educating the public regarding the warning signs of eating disorders and appropriate treatment interventions.

Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important endeavor, and I urge swift passage of House Joint Resolution 214.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objeciton.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 214

Whereas anorexia nervosa (also known as starvation sickness) and bulimia (also known as binge-purge syndrome) are emotional disorders that can lead to serious physical illness and even death;

Whereas experts estimate that 1 out of every 100 women between the ages of 12 and 25 suffers from anorexia nervosa, that 1 out of every 7 women in that age group develops bulimia, and that nearly 10 percent of all patients who are referred to eating disorder clinics are men;

Whereas there has been a dramatic increase in the number of reported cases of anorexia nervosa and bulimia, making the need to provide effective treatment to the victims of these disorders much larger than in the past; and

Whereas public awareness about the personal and familial tragedies caused by anorexia nervosa and bulimia must be raised in order to promote continued research into the causes and treatments of these and other eating disorders: Now, therefore, be it

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAWYER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAWYER: Page 2, line 3, strike "October 23 through October 29, 1989," and insert "October 22 through October 28, 1990,".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAWYER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title amendment offered by Mr. SAWYER: Amend the title so as to read: "Joint Resolution designating the week of October 22 through October 28, 1990, as 'Eating Disorders Awareness Week'.".

The title amendment was agreed to

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL RED RIBBON WEEK FOR A DRUG-FREE AMERICA

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 346) to designate October 20 through 28, 1990, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] and I also acknowledge the work of the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 346, making the week of October 20–28, 1990, "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America." I would like to commend the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG] for his efforts in bringing this measure to the floor.

The National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth has established the theme "Line Up To Sign Up for a Drug-Free Decade." They are calling for comprehensive public awareness and prevention and education programs involving parent and community groups.

At the forefront of the distinguished citizens who are participating in this program is our First Lady, Mrs. Bush, who are the honorary chairpersons of the Red Ribbon campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I have worked long and hard trying to help make our Nation a little more drug-free. We must never underestimate the power of programs like Red Ribbon. A grassroots desire to speak up, declare a town or county drug-free, and be heard throughout the Nation, carries a very powerful message.

Accordingly, I strongly support this measure and I urge all our colleagues to participate and vote in favor of House Joint Resolution 595.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to acknowledge that October 20–28, 1990, has been designated "National Red Ribbon Week," during which individuals may wear a red ribbon to demonstrate their support for a drug-free America.

In recognition of this event, on October 22, Concepts For Narcotics Prevention Inc.-The Place, a community counseling center in Northport, Long Island will have representatives at Northpoint High School so that students can sign up and wear a red ribbon to show their commitment to a drug-free nation.

The Place provides treatment services for drug- and alcohol-abuse problems through individual, group, and family therapy. Its professional staff of educators, counselors, and social workers is certified to treat the recreational user as well as the drug-dependent population. Its programs include crisis intervention, family-life education workshops, parent support groups, and a free walk-in clinic, held on the first Sunday of each month for evaluation and assessment, information and referral services.

Mr. Speaker, it is the philosophy of Concepts-The Place that, "In school and in the community, for youth and adults, Concepts For Narcotics Prevention Inc.-The Place is working toward the philosophical goal of providing a drug-free environment in which individuals can realize their full potential through positive relationships and productive life styles."

Illegal drug trafficking and abuse continue to be painfully visible. As my colleagues know, they are two of the most serious problems facing our Nation today. I commend concepts for Narcotics Prevention Inc.-The Place and its director, Joan B. Ayer for their tireless efforts, and I would urge my colleagues to support National Red Ribbon Week by wearing a red ribbon throughout the week to demonstrate our determination to bring about a drug-free America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 346

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse has reached epidemic proportions and is of major concern to all Americans;

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse is a major public health threat and is one of the largest causes of preventable disease, disability, and death in the United States today;

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse costs the United States nearly $100,000,000,000 each year;

Whereas illegal drug use is not limited to persons of a particular age, gender, or socioeconomic status, and evidenced by the fact that—

(1) 23,000,000 Americans age 12 and over currently use illicit drugs;

(2) a nationwide Weekly Reader survey revealed that, of the 68,000 fourth graders polled, 34 percent reported peer pressure to try wine coolers, 41 percent to smoke, and 24 percent to use crack or cocaine; and

(3) Americans age 15 to 24 have a higher rate of deaths due to accidents, homicides, and suicides, many of which are related to drug and alcohol abuse, than any other age group;

Whereas the drug problem appears to be insurmountable, but the United States has begun to lay the foundation to combat it;

Whereas the United States must continue the important strides made to combat alcohol and other drug abuse;

Whereas the most recent national polls reveal that—

(1) the United States had made progress in combatting alcohol and other drug abuse;

(2) there has been a steady decline in the reported use of marijuana on a daily basis by high school seniors since 1979;

(3) marijuana use among high school seniors was at its lowest level in 11 years in 1987;

(4) there was a significant drop in the use of cocaine in 1987; and

(5) the number of high school seniors associating great risk with trying cocaine once or twice rose from 34 percent in 1968 to 48 percent in 1987;

Whereas illicit use of stimulants and sedatives continues to decline among high school seniors, college students, and young adults in general;

Whereas public opinion polls demonstrate that the American people consider drug abuse one of the most serious domestic problems facing the United States and have begun to take steps to fight it;

Whereas the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth has declared October 20 through 28, 1990, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America," has organized the National Red Ribbon Campaign to coordinate the week, has established the theme "Line Up to Sign Up for a Drug-free Decade" for the week, and has called for a comprehensive public awareness, prevention, and education program involving thousands of parent and community groups across the country;

Whereas other outstanding groups and agencies, including the Parents Communication Network, the National Crime Prevention Council, the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, the United States Conference of Mayors, the National Governors' Association, the Chiefs of Police Drug Task Force, Congressional Families for Drug Free Youth, the Patents' Resource Institute on Drug Education (PRIDE), the Outdoor Advertising Association of America, the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors, Just Say No International, the Corporation Against Drug Abuse (CADA), the National Association, the Washington Regional Alcohol Program (WRAP), the National Prevention Network, the Office for Substance Abuse Prevention of the Department of Health and Human Services, the National Parents and Teachers Association, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the American Council for Drug Education, Youth to Youth, the Drug Enforcement Administration of the Department of Justice, national youth organizations, and national service organizations, have demonstrated leadership, creativity, and determination in efforts to achieve a drug-free America;

Whereas the National Red Ribbon Campaign is headed by President and Mrs. George Bush as national honorary chairpersons, and by a distinguished national advisory committee, including Bill Cosby, Tom Landry, Joan Lunden, Boone Pickens, and Peter Ueberroth;

Whereas any use of an illegal drug is unacceptable, and the illegal use of a legal drug cannot be tolerated; and

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse destroys lives, spawns rampant crime, undermines our economy, and threatens our national security: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) the period of October 20 through 28, 1990, is designated as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America";

(2) the President is authorized and directed to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United Sates—

(A) to observe the week by holding meetings, conferences, and fundraising activities to support community and alcohol education, and with other appropriate activities, events, and educational campaigns; and

(B) both during the week and thereafter, to wear and display red ribbions to present and symbolize commitment to a healthy, drug-free life-style, and to develop an attitude of intolerance concerning the use of drugs; and

(3) Congress recognizes and commends the hard work and dedication of concerned parents, youth, law enforcement, educators, business leaders, religious leaders, private sector organizations, and Government leaders in combatting the abuse of alcohol and other drugs.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN TEXTILE INDUSTRY BICENTENNIAL WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 518) designating October 13 through 20, 1990, as "American Textile Industry Bicentennial Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 518

Whereas in 1790 Samuel Slater, an immigrant mechanic, began producing cotton yarn via water-powered machinery in Pawtucket, Rhode Island;

Whereas Samuel Slater's success led to the firm establishment of the textile factory system in the United States of America and helped give birth to the United States industrial revolution;

Whereas thousands of immigrants from dozens of nations came to the United States to work in these mills and factories alongside the thousands of American textile workers;

Whereas the textile industry has played a major role in the development of the American economy, social system, and political history over the past 200 years; and

Whereas the leaders of the United States textile industry have declared 1990 as "America's Textile Industry Bicentennial Year" in recognition of the 200th anniversary of the first successful production of cotton yarn in this country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 13 through October 20, 1990, is designated as "American Textile Industry Bicentennial Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Speaker, today, we bring before the House of Representatives, House Joint Resolution 518, commemorating 200 years of the textile industry in America.

This legislation, which the gentlewoman from Tennessee and I introduced earlier this year, has a special importance in my State of Rhode Island.

That is because it is on the banks of the Blackstone River in Rhode Island where 200 years ago in 1790, Samuel Slater began producing cotton yarn by water-powered machinery in Pawtucket, RI.

Samuel Slater's success established the textile factory system in America, and gave birth to the U.S. industrial revolution.

This important story in our labor and manufacturing history deserves to be told and remembered.

The Blackstone River valley, where Slater Mill still stands today, recalls a neglected era of the American past: the age of industry.

The valley is the story of a people at work.

It is the story of entrepreneurs * * * of families at work in factories and on farms * * * of industrial managers and labor organizers * * * of immigrants * * * of religious dissidents and conformists.

Today, people continue to work in and around the nationally significant buildings and historic communities.

Recently, Congress helped provide for the preservation of this critical period in our American history with the passage of legislation I introduced with Senators PELL and CHAFEE to provide grants and other funding for historical and cultural preservation in the Blackstone valley.

Two hundred years ago, the story of America's industrial history truly began. This week, we both commemorate that history and promise it a place in our future.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 158) designating October 22 through 28, 1989, as "World Population Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to acknowledge the work of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. MOODY], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield under my reservation to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Joint Resolution 248, designating October 22 through October 28, 1990, as "World Population Awareness Week." I wish to commend the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. MOODY], for introducing this amendment.

Today we are faced with a population explosion that is exceeding 5 billion presently and still growing at an unprecedented rate as we speak. Unfortunately it is in the poorest of countries that this growth is taking place. It is these countries that are least able to provide even the the most basic of services for their current citizens. Countries such as those in the Indian subcontinent, the Middle East, Africa, and Latin America

During the past year the Congress has increasingly focused its attention on the problems of global warming, rain forest deforestation, natural resource depletion, Third World debt, and the dangers such environmental destruction present to the health and prosperity of the world and its people. Population growth is another essential factor that demands our attention. If the United States is going to do something to address the pressing problems of today's planet, we must recognize the strain that rapid population growth places on the already scarce resources of so many developing nations.

The demands of a growing population have contributed substantially to enormous environmental devastation and pose threats of even greater harm to many aspects of life.

The developing world needs to be educated on voluntary child spacing, maternal health programs, and family planning in order to prevent unnecessary deaths, as well as a booming population due to lack of education on birth control

Growing populations force many nations to borrow heavily and to sell off their natural resorces to cover the interest on their debts. In such circumstances such as the destruction of tropical rain forests at a rate of 50,000 acres per day, or the pollution created that is damaging the ozone layer to such an extent that within 40 years the ultraviolet light reaching our planet is expected to be up to 20 percent greater than it is today.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a proud supporter of the legislation designating October 22 through October 28, 1990, as "World Population Awareness Week," and I am hopeful that we can educate ourselves and the growing world on better methods to save lives and our previous gem, Mother Earth.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of New York. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the thoughts of my friend from New York on this important issue.

The world population will surely double in some decades. We can debate whether it will be 3, 4, or 5 or 6, but unless we do something about it, it will surely double.

What will we accomplish if we cut by 50 percent the per capita emission of greenhouse gases if in fact we double the world's populations? We will be just as badly off as when we started.

□ 2150

Mr. Speaker, I think it is tragic that the abortion debate has prevented this Congress, and this administration and the previous administrations from coming to grips with this most important problem. Certainly, when he was a Member of Congress, no one was more outspoken on the world population problem and the need for world family planning that was then Congressman Bush, and it is certainly my hope that President Bush will once again recognize the terrible importance of this issue and that his administration will proceed to address it.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE], my friend, and I ask only at this point to associate myself with the remarks of the two gentlemen from New York who preceded me and to join them in commending the work of the gentleman from Wisconin [Mr. MOODY].

This is perhaps the most important of all environmental problems we face.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to my colleague from New York when he mentioned the work of Congressman Bush when he was here two decades ago. I was the author of a bill, the Family Research and Population Planning Act, that we worked on from 1967 to 1970. That was cosponsored by the distinguished Senator from Maryland, Joe Tydings, and there were two people that I could always count on to help to give stalwart, and intelligent and articulate help, and one was Bob Taft, Congressman Bob Taft from Ohio. I think he was the nephew of the Senator.

Mr. SAWYER. Son.

Mr. SCHEUER. Was he the son of the Senator?

Of course the other, Mr. Speaker, was Congressman George Bush. George at that time was a very thoughtful, very articulate and very intelligent proponent of family planning, and it is just a pity that, when a voice is needed in the bully pulpit today, that the old George Bush seems nowhere to be found. We urgently need that eloquent, articulate voice.

Much progress has been taking place in Asia and in Latin America since those days in the last two decades, a great deal of progress. The one bleak area of the world, the one area in which one feels there is almost no hope and where the future only holds the most awful tragedy in store for us all, is sub-Saharan Africa, a continent that has an actual population growth rate of somewhere between 3 and 3½ percent. That gives them a 20- to 25-year doubling period. There are some estimates that the current population of sub-Saharan Africa, which is about 600 or 650 million, will be 2.5 billion in the latter half of this century, will be one-quarter of the global population.

My colleagues, if they cannot support a population of 600 or 650 million now, how on Earth are they going to support a population of 2.5 billion in another 60 or 70 years?

Mr. Speaker, we have only the prospect of unmitigated disaster that defies the imagination, and it is pathos, and it is horror, what we have seen with the scenes we have seen of starving kids with flies all over their faces as they seem to be expiring in front of our eyes is nothing compared to the scenes of mass starvation, by the millions, that we are destined to see in another three-quarters of a century.

There is no challenge involved in our foreign aid program that can challenge us, that has the nobility, the magnificent possibility, of saving lives, saving families, saving humankind, the most unimaginable tragedy as the concept of bringing responsible parenthood to the peoples of sub-Saharan Africa, and I commend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER] for bringing this fine resolution.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] for yielding. I do not want this discussion of world population issues to come only from the Members from New York.

I recall during the early 1960's, that national debate on this topic was stimulated by the work of a professor at Stanford University in California, Dr. Paul Enhrlich, who, with his wife Anne wrote a book titled "The Population Bomb." The book laid out in great detail the kind of problems that have been described so eloquently by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER], and, in fact, he was so eloquent, the book was so persuasive, that one of the first pieces of legislation which I introduced in the early 1960's had to do with global population problems. I followed the lead of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER] and the work that he has described in the later years of the 1960's.

Mr. Speaker, the problem then was far less serious than it is today. We had about half the global population that we have now, and the conditions of the Third World, relatively speaking, are probably worse today, in comparison with the so-called First World, than they were then. There is no solution to global environmental economic problems that does not encompass a major effort on the part of all the peoples of the world to bring under control the rate of population growth. I will not enumerate all of the problems that have already been referred to very eloquently by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] and others.

However, Mr. Speaker, unless we are able to accomplish some reduction in global population growth rates then the problems that face us in environmental degradation, hunger, education, health, and other areas will continue to get worse.

So, I want to acknowledge the importance of this resolution, and I certainly express my support for it.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, the final word on this goes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I wish to add my strong support to the importance of world population in our proper planning of resources for the Third World, to recognize that the issue is not resources, but resources per capita. So, if we are in a world of shrinking resources and growing capita, we are destined for crisis.

The gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN], my good colleague and friend, has referenced the most recent work of Paul Anne Erhrlich. Paul Erhrlich just won one of the MacArthur fellowships, the so-called Genius Awards. My colleague's reference to the book brings to mind a chart in that book which I would like to describe. Population is plotted on a vertical axis against time on a horizontal axis. The representation shows population growth over the millennia, from the beginning of time up to the year 1900, roughly as a horizontal line, with only the smallest positive slope, but from roughly 1940 onward that curve turns vertical, vertical, not just slightly sloped, but vertical. That line demonstrates a very different world in which we live than has ever been experienced by humankind.

The other point I would make in rising on this occasion is to emphasize the importance of reversing the Mexico City policy. It is essential in our foreign aid that we grant assistance to those family planning organizations which are doing their best to control population growth so that quality of life may be enhanced. And yet we are curbing our own efforts in that regard when we take money away from those who would effectively use it for family planning, out of a desire to apply a rule that we do not even have in this country, namely depriving a woman of her right of choice.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Census and Population, Mr. SAWYER, and his staff for their work in getting House Joint Resolution 248 to the floor. I would also like to thank the 219 Members who cosponsored this resolution.

I am pleased to see that today the House is joining the Senate in passing this legislation, which will designate October 21 through October 28 as World Population Awareness Week. The purpose of World Population Awareness Week is to draw attention to and educate Americans about global population concerns. World Population Awareness Week has had a long history of success. Hundreds of events took place throughout the country last year and over 35 Governors proclaimed World Population Awareness Week as a time for Americans to reflect upon the implications of rapid population growth, particularly in economically struggling parts of the world.

The world's population has been growing at tremendous rates. Our population is well over 5 billion and it is expected to double or possibly triple in the next century. Much of the population growth is occurring in countries least able to physically or economically support it. We can see the consequences of rapid population growth throughout the world—unemployment, malnutrition, environmental degradation, overcrowded cities, and atmospheric pollution.

This year we celebrated the 20th anniversary of Earth Day. For people throughout the world it was a time to reflect on the status of our planet and where it is heading. As we recognized this day we could not ignore the relationship between population growth, the environment, and health. There is a clear link between overpopulation, illness, environmental deterioration, and resource depletion.

My hope for this week is that it won't be just a time to call attention to the expanding planet, but it will also be a time to renew our commitment to improve the lives of the people who suffer from the effects of rapid population growth. An estimated 5 million infant deaths and 125,000 maternal deaths could be prevented each year if voluntary means of child spacing and maternal health programs were expanded to meet minimal needs. Many families in the developing countries need and want family planning but lack access to it. World Population Awareness Week provides Americans with the opportunity to think about these problems and to help formulate policies to combat them.

Far too many women and infants die from lack of voluntary family planning services. Mental health declines as mothers are forced to have more children in the hope that at least some will survive. Economically the families and these poor countries are destined to stay poor unless they break the cycle of overpopulation, malnourishment, illiteracy, and ill health.

The industrialized nations are not doing all that they can to assist struggling societies in providing funds to voluntary family planning programs. I have seen firsthand in my experiences working with Care and the Peace Corps how many problems in the developing world are directly linked or further exacerbated by rapid population growth. Effective family planning is a vital component of any effort to eliminate poverty and hunger in the Third World. Without it, we are condemning millions of people to a life of hardship and suffering.

Right now we have mostly subscribed to a "band-aid' approach—we send food and money so that children in the Third World don't die of starvation. But we haven't properly addressed the root cause of the problem. By increasing awareness of and access to voluntary family planning, lending people seed money to start their own small businesses, and teaching proper nutrition we can really make a difference in the quality of life in the poor countries of the world.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 158

Whereas the population of the world today exceeds five billion and is growing at an unprecedented rate of approximately ninety million per year;

Whereas virtually all of this growth is occurring in the poorest countries, those countries least able to provide even basic services for their current citizens;

Whereas the demands of growing populations have contributed substantially to enormous environmental devastation and pose threats of even greater harm to the world;

Whereas one-half of the ten million infant deaths and one-quarter of the five hundred thousand maternal deaths that occur each year in the developing world could be prevented if voluntary child spacing and maternal health programs could be substantially expanded;

Whereas research reveals that one-half of the women of reproductive age in the developing world want to limit the size of their families but lack the means or ability to gain access to family planning;

Whereas the global community has for more than twenty years recognized that it is a fundamental human right for people to voluntarily and responsibly determine the number and spacing of their children and the United States has been a leading advocate of this right;

Whereas the demands of growing populations force many countries to borrow heavily and sell off their natural resources to cover the interest on their debt;

Whereas selling off natural resources in such circumstances often causes irretrievable losses, such as the destruction of the tropical rain forests at a rate of fifty thousand acres per day;

Whereas the reliance of a rapidly growing world population on burning fuels is a critical factor in the emission of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, which many scientists believe has already catalyzed a warming of the Earth's climate;

Whereas pollution is damaging the ozone layer to such an extent that within forty years the ultraviolet light reaching our planet is expected to be up to 20 percent greater than it is today; and

Whereas in 1988, forty State Governors proclaimed "World Population Awareness Week" in their States to call attention to the consequences of rapid population growth and the House of Representatives also passed a resolution to that effect: Now, therefore, be it

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAWYER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAWYER: Page 3, line 3, strike "October 22 through October 28, 1989," and insert "October 21 through October 27, 1990,".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAWYER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

The title amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITIES EDUCATION AND AWARENESS DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 304) to designate October 17, 1990, as "National Drug-Free Schools and Communities Education and Awareness Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

□ 2200

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to recognize the work of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH], the chief sponsor of this joint resolution, and to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 304, establishing October 17, 1990, as National Drug-Free Schools and Communities Education Awareness Day. I would like to commend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH] for his efforts in bringing this measure to the floor. I would also like to recognize the unceasing efforts of the distinguished chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. Speaker, the problems of drug abuse have pervaded throughout our society. We have spent billions of dollars attempting to combat the problem, but the truth is Americans are spending over $100 billion buying illicit drugs. Federal spending alone will not cure this problem. This problem can be effectively addressed only by a comprehensive program of reducing supply and demand, including the education of our youth.

We must educate our youth, prepare them to resist the temptations of drugs by warning them of the physical, psychological and social dangers of drug use and that drugs are not recreational—Drugs are deadly. For those students who know only a life including drug use, we must teach them that there is a better way. There is no single component in our antidrug effort that is more important than the education of our young.

Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support this measure, and I urge all my colleagues to vote in favor of this resolution.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to comment on one of the resolutions that I am a sponsor of, but I could not help just mentioning in listening to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], who was very eloquent about the subject, that the number one drug with young people in schools is still alcohol. I hope that in our efforts to have a drug-free society and so on, that we realize that that is a very, very important component with respect to the overall education of young people.

It is not just hard drugs or what we call illegal drugs. Alcohol is still the No. 1 problem with young people. It is the No. 1 problem in their car accidents, in maiming people, and so on, across the country. Hopefully we in this Congress will amend the Omnibus Crime Act to include alcohol.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 304

Whereas one in every two high school seniors who graduated in 1989 used an illegal drug before graduating;

Whereas the Congress recognizes that drug abuse exists among people in all geographic areas, of all socioeconomic classes, and of all ethnic and racial groups;

Whereas the Congress recognizes that education and public awareness regarding the dangers of drug abuse are necessary to prevent the children and young people of this Nation from entering into cycles of drug abuse; and

Whereas the Congress recognizes that members of a community must unite and work together to address the drug abuse problem that this Nation confronts: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 17, 1990, is designated as "National Drug-Free Schools and Communities Education and Awareness Day", and the President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States, departments and agencies of State and local governments, and interested organizations to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies, activities, and programs.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL TRAUMA AWARENESS MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 351) to designate the month of May 1991 as "National Trauma Awareness Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 351

Whereas more than eight million individuals in the United States suffer traumatic injury each year;

Whereas traumatic injury is the leading cause of death of individuals less than forty-four years of age in the United States;

Whereas every individual is a potential victim of traumatic injury;

Whereas traumatic injury often occurs without warning;

Whereas traumatic injury frequently renders its victims incapable of caring for themselves;

Whereas past inattention to the causes and effects of trauma has led to the inclusion of trauma among the most neglected medical conditions;

Whereas the people of the United States spend more than $140 billion on the problem of trauma;

Whereas the problem of trauma can be remedied only by prevention and treatment through emergency medical services and trauma systems; and

Whereas the people of the United States must be educated in the prevention and treatment of trauma and in the proper and effective use of emergency medical systems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May, 1991 is designated as "National Trauma Awareness Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEOGRAPHY AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 323) designating November 11 through 17, 1990, as "Geography Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to recognize the work of the chief sponsor, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], and yield to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, although the observation of Geography Awareness Week over the past 3 years has been quite successful in increasing students' knowledge of geography, we still have a long way to go. In a study done in 1988, Americans aged 18 to 24 ranked last in an international comparison of geographic knowledge, and American adults of all ages scored among the bottom third. Thirty percent of the students surveyed at one U.S. university could not locate the Pacific Ocean on a world map. Nearly half of the college students in a California poll could not identify the location of Japan. In addition, 75 percent of Americans surveyed could not locate the Persian Gulf on a map.

Geography illiteracy puts the United States at a significant disadvantage and weakens our ability to remain a nation with worldwide involvements and aspirations. Continued ignorance of world geography will severely hinder us in competing and participating effectively in the international marketplace. Indeed, as a nation with global influence and responsibilities we must possess an understanding of other lands and cultures of the world.

I hope that Geography Awareness Week will again emphasize the importance of geographic literacy and awareness so that our students and our future leaders can effectively compete in global markets and take the lead in meeting international political, economic, environmental, social, and military challenges. We, as the Nation's political leaders, have the responsibility to elevate the importance of geography education and increase its emphasis in the Nation's schools. I urge you to help our students, who are our future leaders, become aware of the world around them.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE], my friend and my neighbor, geographically adjacent to Ohio. I join the gentleman in commending the work of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], and recognizing that in addition to all of the other skills that young people in America need to master, among those is the ability to use a globe as if their world depended on it, because it does.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, one of the key themes and tasks for Congress in this past session has been restoring America's competitiveness in a highly complex and rapidly changing world. America's global influence and responsibilities demand an understanding of the lands, languages and cultures of the world. The sweeping events of the past year make this goal more important than ever. Certainly the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe, the reunification of Germany, the move toward a common market in 1992, the continuing rise of the Pacific rim nations, and the crisis in the Persian Gulf drive home the importance of these responsibilities.

I am pleased the House of Representatives has accepted this responsibility and has once again adopted November 11–17, 1990, as Geography Awareness Week to help meet this challenge. This House is to be commended for recognizing the importance of elevating geography education and increasing its emphasis in the Nation's schools. I was proud to be the original cosponsor of this resolution in the House when it was introduced for the first time in 1987, and again in 1988 and 1989. I am proud to be joined again this year by my distinguished colleagues, Representatives BILL GREEN and DALE KILDEE.

Geography Awareness Week will once again emphasize the importance of geographic literacy and awareness so that our students and the future leaders of America can effectively compete in global markets and take the lead in meeting international, political, economic, and social challenges. Geography Awareness Week will stimulate students' interests in their environment and concern for its land, air, water, energy resources, plants, and animals. Through geography, students will explore and learn more about our fragile Earth.

Improving our knowledge of the geography, language and culture of other lands will help us reaffirm our leading role in international trade and our place in the world economy. We cannot compete with the Pacific rim nations and the European Community if we do not know our competitors. Knowledge of geography offers perspectives and information necessary to understand ourselves, our relationship to the Earth, and our interdependence with other peoples of the world. Congress must continue the commitment to increase our awareness and heighten interest in geography education in our schools.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 323

Whereas geography is the study of people, their environments, and their resources;

Whereas the United States is a truly unique Nation with diverse landscapes, bountiful resources, a distinctive multiethnic population, and a rich cultural heritage, all of which contribute to the status of the United States as a world power;

Whereas the leadership of the United States in world affairs is threatened by a lack of understanding of the locations and significance of historic changes occurring around the globe;

Whereas a knowledge of geography provides a "Window on a Changing World" and a way in which to understand events and their impacts on the United States;

Whereas the United States is a Nation of worldwide involvements and influence, the responsibilities of which demand an understanding of the lands, languages, and cultures of the world;

Whereas geographically today offers perspectives and information in understanding ourselves, our relationship to the Earth, and our interdependence with other peoples of the world;

Whereas the first federally funded National Assessment of Educational Progress survey revealed a "disturbing geography knowledge gap" among 12th graders in the United States;

Whereas this survey also indicated that many students did not know that the Mississippi River flows into the Gulf of Mexico, or that the Panama Canal shortens sailing time between the east and west coasts of the United States, nor could they identify Jerusalem on a regional map, or name the three oceans moving east around the globe from Africa;

Whereas departments of geography are being eliminated from institutes of higher learning in the United States, thus endangering the discipline of geography in this country;

Whereas, while geography as a distinct discipline has virtually disappeared from the curricula of schools in the United States, it is still being taught as a basic subject in other countries, including the United Kingdom, Canada, Japan, and the Soviet Union;

Whereas an ignorance of geography, foreign languages, and cultures places the United States at a disadvantage with other countries in matters of business, politics, the environment, and global events;

Whereas one-third of adults in the United States cannot name four of the sixteen North/ Atlantic Treaty Organization member nations, and another one-third cannot name any; and

Whereas national attention must be focused on the integral role that knowledge of world geography plays in preparing citizens of the United States for the future of an increasingly interdependency, interconnected, and rapidly changing world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of November 11 through 17, 1990, is designated as "Geography Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATIONS WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 270) to designate the period commencing February 17, 1991, and ending February 23, 1991, as "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am pleased to yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR], the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Chairman SAWYER of the Census and Population Subcommittee, as well as Mr. RIDGE, the ranking minority member, for their fine leadership and efforts on that subcommittee. I would also like to thank Chairman FORD of the full committee for his support and cosponsorship of this bill, which will pay tribute for the third year in a row to the truly samaritan efforts of Visiting Nurse Associations all across our land. Thanks are also due to Senator BRADLEY and Senator HATCH for their companion bill, Senate Joint Resolution 270, which passed the other body 3 weeks ago. In addition, I want to thank my legislative aide Christopher Porter for assisting me in the passage of this legislation.

My colleague, Mr. BURTON of Indiana, and I introduced House Joint Resolution 509 to designate February 17 through 23, 1991, as "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week." The VNA movement in America is over 100 years old, and the over 460 Visiting Nurse Associations serve virtually every community in America. From the inner city to the suburbs to sprawling farms, these dynamic associations involve registered nurses, nurses aides, therapists, medical specialists, and volunteers to provide quality, professional homecare to nearly 1 million of our Nation's neediest citizens—regardless of the patient's ability to pay.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Pepper Commission, I know well the crisis facing our citizens not only in affordability of access to health care in the United States, but also with respect to long-term care. It is essential that Congress recognize the efforts of volunteer and not-for-profit organizations that help to reduce health costs. Visiting Nurse Associations increase access to home health services for millions of Americans who might not otherwise get them. For those with the greatest need of home care, those who can least afford it, VNA's allow the sick to be nursed back to health, receive physical or occupational therapy, or die quietly with dignity, with compassion, in their own homes. Whether it is health or personal care, physical therapy, nutritional counseling or social services, VNA's assume the role of caregiver that once fell upon another family member. People of all ages, races, and cultures benefit from the continued success of VNA's in America.

Today, Visiting Nurse Associations carry on a tradition of innovation in health care. VNA's are at the forefront in maternal child care, as well as home intravenous therapy and respiratory care. In many cities, VNA's have developed special shelters where the homeless can receive attention they would not get otherwise. VNA's, Mr. Speaker, were one of the first groups to recognize the home care needs of Aids victims. Visiting Nurse Associations have also successfully combined the spirit of volunteerism with the skills of talented and dedicated health care professionals. Community volunteers assist VNA's wherever they can help by delivering meals, running errands, fundraising, and in general serving as an extension of the compassionate spirit that surrounds VNA's in our Nation.

I thank my colleague, Mr. BURTON, for his efforts in this bipartisan legislation. By naming February 17 through 23, 1991, as "National Visiting Nurse Association Week," we pay tribute to the efforts of these modern day samaritans to see that they get the thanks and recognition they deserve. This proclamation recognizes all the medical professionals and volunteers in each community who enable Visiting Nurse Associations to carry out their vital mission.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 270

Whereas Visiting Nurse Associations have served homebound Americans since 1885;

Whereas such Associations annually provide home care and support services to more than 1,500,000 men, women, children, and infants;

Whereas such Associations serve 464 urban and rural communities in 45 States;

Whereas such Associations adhere to high standards of quality and provide personalized and cost-effective home health care and support regardless of an individual's ability to pay;

Whereas such Associations are voluntary in nature, independently owned, and community-based;

Whereas such Associations ensure the quality of care through oversight provided by professional advisory committees composed of local physicians and nurses;

Whereas such Associations enable hundreds of thousands of Americans to recover from illness and injury in the comfort and security of their homes;

Whereas such Associations ensure that individuals who are chronically ill or who have physical and mental handicaps receive the therapeutic benefits of care and support services provided in the home;

Whereas, in the absence of such Associations thousands of patients with mental or physical handicaps or chronically disabling illnesses would have to be institutionalized;

Whereas such Associations provide a wide range of services, including health care, hospice care, personal care, homemaking, occupational, physical, and speech therapy, "friendly visiting services", social services, nutritional counseling, specialized nursing care by registered nurses, and meals on wheels;

Whereas in each community served by such an Association, local volunteers support the Association by serving on the board of directors, raising funds, visiting patients in their homes, assisting patients and nurses at wellness clinics, delivering meals on wheels to patients, running errands for patients, working in the Association's office, and providing tender loving care; and

Whereas the need for home health care for young and old alike continues to grow annually: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the period commencing February 17, 1991, and ending February 23, 1991, is designated as "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL FAMILY CAREGIVERS WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 525) designating November 18-24, 1990, and November 17-23, 1991, as "National Family Caregivers Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to acknowledge the work of the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE] who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to our friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 525 designating November 18-24, 1990, as National Family Caregivers Week and would like to commend the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE] for introducing this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, more than 5 million of our elderly have disabilities that render them in need of basic daily care. Statistics show that between 80 and 90 percent of the families provide for the daily care of our elderly and in doing so incur many additional expenses. These family members not only give of their time and energy, but often make great financial and personal sacrifices. This involvement of caregiving strengthens the family bonds and fulfills a functional need in our society as well as provides the younger generation an opportunity to know, respect and serve their elders.

We all know the value of a loving, caring family. These caregivers go beyond the normal responsibilities to family and freely offer help and service to their loved ones in need.

Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 525 calls for a greater public awareness of family caregivers and encourages support of these dedicated people. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this resolution and urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Mr. SAWYER, chairman of the Census and Population Subcommittee, and the ranking minority member, Mr. RIDGE, for bringing House Joint Resolution 525 to the floor. This bill designates Thanksgiving week as the fifth National Family Caregivers Week. I also appreciate the support of more than half of the Members of the House in recognizing the vital contributions and needs of families who care for frail elderly relatives.

National Family Caregivers Week has been signed into law for the past 4 years. During this week, tribute is paid to family caregivers across the country. This is a time to give special recognition and commendation to the many individuals who find personal rewards, but also incredible multiple demands and pressures in caring for disabled older family members. National Family Caregivers Week is also a time in which to focus on ways that communities, employers, service providers, other family members, friends, and neighbors can support and strengthen caregivers throughout the year.

Families, including elderly spouses, provide over 75 percent of the care needed by the elderly, and it is that care which is usually the key factor in delaying or preventing nursing home placement. This informal family care may include personal and medical care, household chores, shopping, and transportation. Almost 75 percent of family caregivers are women, of which 55 percent are employed—and often with children under 18 years of age. About one-third of employed family caregivers lose time from work because of caregiving duties. And the stress and competing family and work demands force many to shift to part time employment or leave the work force altogether.

It is encouraging that the expanding public awareness regarding caregivers is resulting in growing recognition and many new initiatives to help meet their needs. In 1990 alone, a few examples include: First, a Newsweek cover story focusing on the increase of women in the "Daughter track"—working, raising kids and helping aging parents; second, the Stride Rite Corp. opened the first onsite intergenerational day care center for its employees to provide care for young children and frail older persons; third, the Administration on Aging is encouraging State and area agencies on aging to participate in public/private partnership collaborative programs to provide assistance to employed caregivers—often from long distances—such as information and referral for services and support groups; fourth, the Hillhaven Corp. is initiating a National Family Caregiver's Week Program to personally recognize each of its 40,000 employees, select a "best of the best" caregiver—home, work and community—in each of its 400 nursing home and residential facilities to culminate in February with regional recognition of eight outstanding caregivers; fifth, the expanding research agenda on caregivers and services is beginning to produce significant findings, including evidence that the stress of caregiving can adversely affect the immune system; and sixth, several of the larger Federal agencies are developing plans for eldercare programs to assist their caregiver employees. As our older population, particularly those over age 85, rapidly expands in the coming years, initiatives and programs such as these will become even more crucial.

Mr. Speaker, again, I wish to thank my colleagues for their support and concern. I also wish to thank the many individuals and aging organizations for their efforts on behalf of this important legislation.

I urge that this measure be adopted.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 525

Whereas the number of Americans who are age 65 or older is growing;

Whereas there has been an unprecedented increase in the number of persons who are age 85 or older;

Whereas the incidence of frailty and disability increases among persons of advanced age;

Whereas approximately 5,200,000 older persons have disabilities that leave them in need of help with their daily tasks, including food preparation, dressing, and bathing;

Whereas families provide older persons help with such tasks, in addition to providing between 80 and 90 percent of the medical care, household maintenance, transportation, and shopping needed by older persons;

Whereas families who give care to older persons face many additional expenses, including the costs of home modifications, equipment rental, and additional heating;

Whereas 80 percent of disabled elderly persons receive care from their family members, most of whom are their wives, daughters, and daughters-in-law, who often must sacrifice employment opportunities to provide such care;

Whereas the role of the aged spouse as a principal caregiver has generally been understated;

Whereas family caregivers are often physically and emotionally exhausted from the amount of time and stress involved in caregiving activities;

Whereas family caregivers need information about available community resources;

Whereas family caregivers need respite from the strains of their caregiving roles;

Whereas the contributions of family caregivers help maintain strong family ties and assure support among generations; and

Whereas there is a need for greater public awareness of and support for the care that family caregivers are providing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That November 18-24, 1990, and November 17-23, 1991, are each designated "National Family Caregivers Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such weeks with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

The title amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Res. 347) designating April 7 through 13, 1991, as "National County Government Week" and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 347

Whereas county government is the oldest form of local government in the United States;

Whereas 98 percent of Nation's population reside in counties;

Whereas county governments employed over 1,900,000 people and spent almost $103,000,000,000 last year to provide a wide range of services for the benefit of the people of the United States;

Whereas county governments are often the last available resource for providing emergency and long-term services for the poor, the homeless, immigrants, refugees, the disadvantaged, and other segments of society;

Whereas county governments own and operate 1,000 health care facilities and over 2,000 health departments;

Whereas almost 1,200 counties are now managed by appointed administrators or elected executives;

Whereas over the last 30 years county governments have assumed increasing responsibility for the administration and financing of health, welfare, justice, transportation, housing, and community development programs; and

Whereas county governments have also been assigned a greater role in solving area wide problems dealing with air pollution, water pollution, solid waste disposal, airports, transit systems, regional parks, and other issues: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of April 7 through 13, 1991, is designated as "National County Government Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 307

Whereas there are more than 1,200,000 women veterans in the Nation, representing 4.2 percent of the total veteran population;

Whereas the number of women serving in the Armed Forces and the number of women veterans continue to increase;

Whereas women veterans have contributed greatly to the security of the Nation through honorable military service, which often involved great hardship and danger;

Whereas the contributions and sacrifices of women veterans on behalf of the Nation deserve greater public recognition and appreciation;

Whereas the special needs of women veterans, especially in the areas of health care, have often been overlooked or inadequately addressed by the Federal Government;

Whereas the lack of attention to the special needs of women veterans has discouraged or prevented many women veterans from taking full advantage of the benefits and services to which they are entitled;

Whereas women are performing a wider range of tasks in the Armed Forces of the Nation, as demonstrated recently by the activities of women in the military action in Panama; and

Whereas designating a week to recognize women veterans in November 1990 will help to promote important gains made by women veterans: Now, therefore, be it

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have no objection to this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 366

Whereas society owes a debt of gratitude to physicians for the contributions of physicians in enlarging the reservoir of scientific knowledge, increasing the number of scientific tools, and expanding the ability of health professionals to use the knowledge and tools effectively in the never-ending fight against disease; and

Whereas society owes a debt of gratitude to physicians for the sympathy and compassion of physicians in ministering to the sick and in alleviating human suffering: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) March 30, 1991, is designated as "National Doctors Day"; and

(2) the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL MILITARY FAMILIES RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 566) acknowledging the sacrifices that military families have made on behalf of the Nation and designating November 19, 1990, as "National Military Families Recognition Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ESPY], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. ESPY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished ranking member for yielding to me, and I thank him for his involvement and for his interest, as well as the involvement and interest of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER]. I thank him as well for helping in passing this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to call for passage of House Joint Resolution 566, the 1990 National Military Families Recognition Day, a joint resolution that I introduced on May 9. This joint resolution calls for designating November 19 as National Military Families Recognition Day.

Mr. Speaker, when I introduced this joint resolution on May 9 we had no idea that 3 months later we would be sending our troops into the Persian Gulf. This marked the third year for me to introduce a resolution recognizing military families, and there was nothing at that time, we thought, unusual about introducing this resolution once again.

Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, and as they say, the rest is history. Much has changed. Now, for me, this resolution means much more, and I know that now for many military families it also must mean much more.

Since August 7, families across America have had to say goodbye to their fathers, their mothers, their sons and daughters. Our great Nation, Mr. Speaker, is truly indebted to military families.

□ 2020

We are indebted to military families because of the pain and suffering they must endure when a loved one is deployed to such places as the Persian Gulf. We are, indeed, indebted to military families because of the instability they must endure as they are forced to move constantly as they are assigned to new locations, so I want to thank all of the 223 of my colleagues who have cosponsored this joint resolution.

I hope that by this resolution, Mr. Speaker, and other methods that we can send a clear message to all families who currently have a family member in the Persian Gulf that we all feel indebted to them and tell them through this resolution how much we appreciate their service and their sacrifice.

Mr. RIDGE. Further reserving the right to object, I want to commend the gentleman from Mississippi for this particular resolution and remind all of our colleagues that whenever a man or woman puts on the uniform of this country, we are proud and privileged to have them serve, but directly and indirectly their entire family serves us as well.

If they are career soldiers, sailors, airmen, or marines, their family travels around the world with them when we ask those in the uniform to travel around the world, and we call on their families to provide emotional and oftentimes the financial support when the resources that we put forth as a government are inadequate. We ask the family and friends to provide the moral support that oftentimes is not provided from back home from either the Government or from other folks.

My personal experience, I recall when I was serving in Vietnam, my father wrote me every single day. I think the trauma of service is probably greater on those not wearing the uniform from time to time than it is on those who are wearing the uniform and accept the responsibility and move forward to protect or promote the interests of this country.

I commend and thank the gentleman from Mississippi for this particular recognition. It is appropriate that we step back once a year and remind ourselves that those who serve us are not only in uniform but it entails their entire family as well.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 566

Where Congress recognizes and supports Department of Defense policies to recruit, train, equip, retain, and field a military force that is capable of preserving peace and protecting the vital interests of the United States and its allies;

Whereas military families shoulder the responsibility of providing emotional support for their service members;

Whereas in times of war and military action, military families have demonstrated their patriotism through their steadfast support and commitment to the Nation;

Whereas the emotional and mental readiness of United States military personnel around the world is tied to the well-being and satisfaction of their families;

Whereas the quality of life that the Armed Forces provide to military families is a key factor in the retention of military personnel;

Whereas the people of the United States are truly indebted to military families for facing adversities, including extended separations from their service members, frequent household moves due to reassignments, and restrictions on their employment and educational opportunities;

Whereas 67 percent of officers and 50 percent of enlisted personnel in the Armed Forces are married;

Whereas families of active duty military personnel (including individuals other than spouses or children) account for more than 2,900,000 of the more than 5,000,000 in the active duty community, and spouses and children of members of the Reserves in paid status account for more than 1,500,000 of the more than 2,700,000 in the Reserves community;

Whereas spouses, children, and other dependents living abroad with members of the Armed Forces total nearly 500,000 and these family members at times face feelings of cultural isolation and financial hardship; and

Whereas military families are devoted to the overall mission of the Department of Defense and have accepted the role of the United States as the military leader and protector of the free world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) Congress acknowledges and appreciates the commitment and devotion of present and former military families and the sacrifices that such families have made on behalf of the Nation; and

(2) November 19, 1990, is designated as "National Military Families Recognition Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ADOPTION WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 362) to designate the period commencing on November 18, 1990, and ending on November 24, 1990, as "National Adoption Week" and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so simply to acknowledge the work of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] who is the chief sponsor of this very important joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to urge my House colleagues to support the passage of House Joint Resolution 476, legislation proclaiming National Adoption Week 1990.

For the past 12 years, the Congress of the United States has designated Thanksgiving Week as a time to recognize and encourage adoptions. During this uniquely American holiday, we traditionally enjoy a good meal with our family members. With National Adoption Week coinciding with this holiday, we hope that families would reflect upon their blessings and remember those children in need, those without families of their own, those alone during the holidays.

Mr. Speaker, today approximately 2 million couples and individuals would like to adopt a child. These are homes with parents who are ready and willing to accept and love children. Yet, unfortunately, 36,000 children are still in the Nation's foster care system. Many of these children are considered to have special needs. Some may be older or part of sibling groups. Many of the children in foster homes are also from minority groups. But, perhaps those children who have the greatest need for adoptive families are those with handicaps. Mr. Speaker, a child with a physical, mental, or emotional handicap needs the benefits and stability provided by a family and loving parents. Adoption may be the key to their future.

Through the support of House Joint Resolution 476, we can focus much needed attention and publicity on adoption. I would like to take this opportunity to thank those many Members who have cosponsored this resolution and have consistently backed our efforts. Furthermore, I commend Senator HATCH of Utah for taking on this challenge in the other body. His support, and that of our President, will continue to make this all possible.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that through the annual enactment of National Adoption Week, we can continue to help with the efforts to find good homes and warm families for children with special needs. I urge the swift adoption of this measure.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 362

Whereas Thanksgiving week has been commemorated as "National Adoption Week" for the past 12 years;

Whereas we in Congress recognize the essential value of belonging to a secure, loving permanent family as every child's right;

Whereas the President of the United States has actively promoted the benefits of adoption by implementing a Federal program to encourage Federal employees to consider adoption;

Whereas approximately thirty-six thousand children who have special needs—school age, in sibling groups, members of minorities, or children with physical, mental and emotional handicaps—are now in foster care or institutions financed at public expense and are legally free for adoption;

Whereas the adoption by capable parents of these institutionalized or foster care children into permanent, adoptive homes would ensure the opportunity for their continued happiness and long-range well-being;

Whereas public and private barriers inhibiting the placement of these special needs children must be reviewed and removed where possible to assure these children's adoption;

Whereas the public and prospective parents must be informed of the availability of adoptive children;

Whereas a variety of media, agencies, adoptive parent and advocacy groups, civic and church groups, businesses, and industries will feature publicity and information to heighten community awareness of the crucial needs of waiting children; and

Whereas the recognition of Thanksgiving week as "National Adoption Week" is in the best interest of adoptable children and the public in general: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the period commencing on November 18, 1990, and ending on November 24, 1990, is designated as "National Adoption Week", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL PHILANTHROPY DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 293) to designate November 16, 1990, as "National Philanthropy Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do so to yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to join me and over 220 cosponsors in support of House Joint Resolution 513 which designates November 16 as National Philanthropy Day.

From the philanthropic founders of our Nation, to those helping in crises of the modern age, our country has always been blessed with individuals who knew the importance of philanthropy.

I believe that as a way of expressing our appreciation to those citizens who have shown their spirit of generosity, it is appropriate that we recognize those who have unselfishly given their time to aid the elderly, disadvantaged, and the sick. National Philanthropy Day will formally recognize philanthropists' contributions, while encouraging them to continue and expand their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the accompanying Senate joint resolution introduced by Senator RIEGLE of Michigan, passed the Senate in September.

For this reason, I find it appropriate that we act upon this measure now, so that these individuals will receive due recognition.

PHILANTHROPIC FACTS

Over 4.5 million volunteers actively participate in America's 800,000 philanthropic organization.

Citizens of the United States contribute over $94 billion annually to support nonprofit philanthropic organizations.

These organizations are largely responsible for enhancing the quality of life of Americans, and other people throughout North America and the world.

Philanthropists fill a great void, where the Government is often times unable to venture. In particular, our churches, schools, art and music centers, museums, youth groups, camps, hospitals, research institutions would be unable to function without volunteers.

I believe that as Representatives of the people, we should emphasize our appreciation by honoring the philanthropic organizations for their efforts, skills, and resources.

Again, I urge you to join myself, the Senate, and over 220 of our colleagues in support of National Philanthropy Day.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 293

Whereas there are more than 800,000 nonprofit philanthropic organizations in the United States;

Whereas such organizations employ more than 10,000,000 persons, including approximately 4,500,000 volunteers;

Whereas the people of the United States contributed approximately $104,000,000,000 in 1988 to support such organizations;

Whereas philanthropic organizations are responsible for enhancing the quality of life of people throughout this Nation and the world;

Whereas the people of this Nation owe a great debt to the schools, churches, museums, art and music centers, youth groups, hospitals, research institutions, community service institutions, and organizations that aid and comfort the disadvantaged, sick, and elderly; and

Whereas the people of the United States should demonstrate gratitude and support for philanthropic organizations and for the efforts, skills, and resources of the people who carry out the missions of such organizations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That November 16, 1990, is designated as "National Philanthropy Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ITALIAN-AMERICAN HERITAGE AND CULTURE MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 349) designating October 1990 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for the opportunity to acknowledge the work of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ENGEL] who, with Senator DECONCINI, brought this particular resolution before us.

In the month of October, it is often easy to think of Italian-American heritage culture as resting on the laurels of Christopher Columbus, particularly as we approach the 500th anniversary of that enormously momentous landing on this continent.

But I think it is equally important to recognize that the culture that we think of as representing the growth of Europe and its role in the Western world really finds its genesis in the movement of those people whose nation today is Italy throughout that great continent some 2,000 years ago, and that it was only its reiteration and its movement to a new continent 500 years ago that we recognize today.

It is a matter of really the acculturation of the Western World that we are talking about when we discuss Italian-American heritage, and so it is from that perspective that I am particularly pleased to recognize the work of those who have brought this measure before us.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. Further reserving the right to object, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I want the opportunity to congratulate everybody who brought this before the House and make note that, unfortunately, that it is more than Italian-Americans who serve in this Chamber and the other body who are going to be called to defend Western civilization over the next 2 years, because a fire storm is building from the far, far crazy left, and I am sure they will find some crazies on the far right to those that hate the United States and everything that has to do with naming a nation Columbia and this district Columbia. The fire storm by 2 years from now will probably be obnoxious, and that is why it is important that we keep alive what it is that you have tried to do in this commemorative.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to thank my colleagues for joining me for the second year in a row in passing House Joint Resolution, 631, legislation which will designate this month of October as Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month. I would also like to thank my colleagues in the Senate for passing identical legislation.

As you know, some 25 million citizens make up the Italian-American community, representing one of the largest ethnic groups in the United States. There are thousands of Italian-American organizations and clubs throughout the United States who greatly contribute to the prosperity and progress of our Nation on a yearly basis.

Italian-Americans have contributed to the United States in all aspects of life including art, science, civil service, military service, athletics, education, and politics.

Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month will feature the many contributions and achievements of Italians and Italian-Americans such as Christopher Columbus, one of the greatest explorers in world history, and Enrico Fermi, one of the early pioneers of nuclear physics. In addition, a key objective of this commemoration will be to acquaint the American public with the lesser known personages such as William Paca, an original signer of the Declaration of Independence. Also, Philip Mazzei is credited with coining the Declaration of Independence phrase "All Men Are Created Equal." He devoted much of his time and energy to the American Revolution where he was an ardent supporter of both religious and political freedom in America. He also carried on an active correspondence with Madison, Jefferson, Thomas Adams, and other Virginians.

Mr. Speaker, we are giving a great honor to one of the largest ethnic communities in this country by passing this resolution. I would like to thank all of my colleagues who have joined me in cosponsoring this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 349

Whereas Italians and Italian-Americans have made contributions in all areas of life in the United States, including art, science, civil service, military service, athletics, education, law, and politics;

Whereas Italian-Americans make up one of the largest ethnic groups in the United States;

Whereas an annual national observance day has been established in October to recognize the accomplishments of Christopher Columbus, one of the greatest explorers in history and the first to record the discovery of the Americas;

Whereas the phrase "All men are created equal", contained in the Declaration of Independence, was suggested by the Italian patriot and immigrant Philip Mazzei;

Whereas the people of the United States take great pride in the accomplishments of the many outstanding men and women of Italian descent who have enriched our Nation's history, including Fiorello LaGuardia, the beloved mayor of New York City, and Enrico Fermi, winner of the 1938 Nobel Prize for Physics;

Whereas Italy enjoys a rich cultural heritage and has given the world the great works of Dante, the breathtaking art of Giotti and Michelangelo, and the inspirational music of Antonio Vivaldi and Domenico Scarlatti;

Whereas the Americas were named for the Italian explorer Amerigo Vespucci;

Whereas William Paca, an Italian-American, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence; and

Whereas during October 1990, special attention will be directed to national, State, and local programs promoting Italian heritage and culture: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1990 is designated as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WEEK OF THE NATIONAL OBSERVANCE OF THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF WORLD WAR II

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 324) to designate June 3 through 9, 1990, as "Week of the National Observance of the 50th Anniversary of World War II" and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply do so to acknowledge the work of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS], who is the chief sponsor of this designation to remind ourselves from June 3 through June 8, 1991, that that is the week of the national observance of the 50th anniversary of World War II, and to thank the gentleman for this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES 324

Whereas the brave men and women of the United States of America made tremendous sacrifices during World War II to save the world from tyranny and aggression;

Whereas the winds of freedom and democracy sweeping the globe today spring from the principles for which over 400,000 Americans gave their lives in World War II;

Whereas World War II and the events that led up to that war must be understood in order that we may better understand our own times, and more fully appreciate the reasons why eternal vigilance against any form of tyranny is so important;

Whereas the World War II era, as reflected in its family life, industry, and entertainment, was a unique period in American history, and epitomized our Nation's philosophy of hard work, courage, and tenacity in the face of adversity;

Whereas, between 1990 and 1995, over 9,000,000 American veterans of World War II will hold reunions and conferences and otherwise commemorate the 50th anniversaries of various events relating to World War II; and

Whereas June 4, 1990, marks the anniversary of the Battle of Midway and June 6, 1990, marks the anniversary of the D-Day battle: Now, therefore, be it

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAWYER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAWYER: Page 2, line 3, strike "June 3-9, 1990," and insert "June 2-8, 1991,".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAWYER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title amendment offered by Mr. SAWYER: Amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution designating June 2-8, 1991, as a 'Week for the National Observance of the 50th Anniversary of World War II'.".

The title amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ENDING HUNGER MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 342) designating October 1990 as "Ending Hunger Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we do so to identify the chief sponsor of this resolution, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH], and to thank all the sponsors of the preceding plus 20 resolutions for securing a minimum of 218 cosponsors. Be it right or wrong, good or bad, that is the requirement that my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio and I have placed upon them. When they go to the trouble and the effort, we think it is appropriate they be recognized for their good work.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the comments of my colleague on the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, who serves as vice chairman of the Committee on Census and Population, the subcommittee which is charged with the responsibility for managing these commemorative resolutions as they come to the floor.

I particularly want to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman for his work and the orderly consideration of these resolutions, and to make note of the fact that together we seek, in coming weeks, to poll our colleagues about the procedures that are used in bringing matters of important public recognition to the floor of this Chamber, and to seek the collaboration of our colleagues as we try to streamline that process.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to join in commending both the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania

[Mr. RIDGE] for night after night coming to the floor to manage the commemorative resolutions that so many of our colleagues have a sincere interest in, and for their devoted effort. They are deserving of the thanks of this entire body.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 342

Whereas hunger affects the lives of 500,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 people in the world and takes the lives of 13,000,000 to 18,000,000 people each year, 75 percent of whom are children under the age of 5;

Whereas, while families often gain widespread media attention and the subsequent response of the public, little attention is focused on the problem of chronic hunger;

Whereas schools and communities should conduct educational programs that lead to the development of viable methods for alleviating hunger;

Whereas there is a need to promote continuing activities that increase education and heighten public awareness about the extent of hunger, its causes, and consequences;

Whereas a society educated about the pervasiveness of hunger is equipped to respond to the needs of hungry people around the world; and

Whereas the United Nations and the United States Congress have designated October 16, 1990, as World Food Day and have called upon all people to take appropriate actions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1990 is designated as "Ending Hunger Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the several joint resolutions just considered and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

There was no objection.

THE AMERICA-SOAKS-THE-RICH MYTH

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, Huey Long said it best in his book in which he recommended that America soaked the rich, and, indeed, we have attempted in recent years to have that kernel of evil return, especially at election time, to begin that demagoguery once again.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a chart, which I will enter into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which explains very simply that the percentage of income taxes paid by the rich has been increasing every year since 1981.

For example, the top 1 percent paid 17 percent of all the taxes in 1981, but in 1987 they paid a fourth, a 40-percent increase in the amount of income taxes from the top 1 percent.

Let me jump to the top 10 percent. In 1981, they paid 48 percent of the taxes, but in 1987, they paid 55 percent of the taxes.

But what about those in the bottom half? From those 50 to 90 percent of all of those who pay taxes? The percentage of revenue has reduced by 14, and those in the bottom half, those in the bottom half of income taxpayers in America, went from 7 percent of the tax in 1981 to 6 percent last year.

The chart referred to is as follows:

INCOME TAX COLLECTIONS BY PERCENTILE—1981 TO 1987

[In billions of 1982 dollars [1]]

	1981	1987	Percent change
Total	$300.3	$313.0	4.3
The rich:
Top 1 percent	$51.7	$77.1	49.1
Percent share	17.6	24.6	39.8
Top 5 percent	$94.6	$134.9	42.6
Percent share	35.1	43.1	22.8
Top 10 percent	$144.4	$173.7	20.3
Percent share	48.0	55.5	15.6
The rest:
Middle 50–90 percent	$132.9	$120.4	−9.4
Percent share	44.3	38.5	−13.1
Bottom 50 percent	$22.4	$19.1	−14.7
Percent share	7.5	6.1	−18.7

THE SWORD OF THE ARABS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, as all of the turmoil of the last couple of weeks on the budget keeps ringing in our ears, occasionally I like to come to the well and remind my friends on both sides of the aisle, and I hope they are numerous, that we will resolve this probably by the 28th of October. If there was a pool going, that is the day I would pick. Eleven more days of wildness trying to budget our books.

The real problems facing the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States of America, one George Walker Bush, our President, I think he is a darn good one. The biggest problem he has is facing up to the sword of the Arabs, and how to beat this sword into a plowshare.

We will hope that we do not have to do it violently. However, that may yet come to pass. Who is the sword of the Arabs? Well, this is not the first time I have ever referred to a magazine story in U.S. News & World Report, and my compliments to the editors because they told it all, way back in June, 2 full months before the invasion of Kuwait. Saddam Hussein was called in this ominous looking cover, "The Most Dangerous Man in the World."

Today's newspaper, months later, one of the Washington, DC, newspapers, the Washington Times, their headline says, "President Bush Talks of Atrocity Trial for Saddam." Somewhere in our foreign policy, and Mr. Bush or his appointee, an excellent Secretary of State, James Baker III, they could not undo the track we were on in the State Department that went on for years to help inadvertently build up the sword of the Arabs, as he is calling himself, but listen to the first paragraph of today's paper, and then I will read the first couple of paragraphs from this June 4 U.S. News & World Report story.

President Bush expresses outrage yesterday in Dallas at reports of Iraqi atrocities against Kuwaiti children, and elderly, and warned that President Saddam Hussein, and I believe it is fair to call him Sadist Insane now—and his top military officers could face a Nuremberg style trial for war crimes. Calling Mr. Hussein Hitler Revisited, Mr. Bush suggested senior Iraqi leaders should be prosecuted as war criminals.

Here is the beginning of the cover story of June 4, 1990, in the U.S. News & World Report.

The world's most dangerous man, with billions to spend and help from the United States, the Soviet Union, and Europe, Saddam Hussein is amassing a truly terrifying arsenal.

I will be inserting into the RECORD the list. Just a sampling of weapons that were delivered to Iraq in the 1980's, in this strange season of political upheaval, with the lights of dictators winking out around the globe, the world suddenly seems a saner and safer place. However, as Mikhail Gorbachev, yesterday's recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize and George Bush confer this week, and this is in June we are seeking, providing a little new hope for safety and sanity in ancient Baghdad, half a world away a dangerous man with great ambitions is hosting a summit of his own. Skiping forward in this paragraph,

In Hussein's ruthless obsessive quest to become the Sword of Arabs, as he lately has styled himself, he has relied upon the complicity of Western and other governments, the greed of middlemen, and a clandestine arms procurement network with front companies in the U.S. and Europe.

The article goes on to point out the Atlanta branch of Italy's biggest state-owned bank extended more than a billion dollars in credit for Iraqu arm deals, and the article goes on and on.

Let me point out something again that I am just going to keep pointing out to the world until we finally know the historical outcome of this madman. Israel, on June 7, 1981, and that is almost 9½, 10 years next June, they bombed the Osirak reactor built with French money. Now, President Mitterrand has to send French boys to go in harm's way in the Persian-Arabian Gulf area.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out again that our country, unfortunately, Ronald Reagan's first few months in office criticized Isreal for unilaterally taking out this building, the nuclear reactor called the Osirak reactor in Iraq. If they had 9 more years of activity at that site, completing it 7½ years ago and driving toward production of plutonium weapons used fuel, atomic fuel, I am afraid the crisis in the gulf would have wholly different dimensions.

As one of my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee said many times, the gentleman from California, Mr. DUNCAN HUNTER by name, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] and I have counseled together over the last 9 years that many, many times we have found ourselves saluting Israel for taking out that Osirak Reactor. Now it seems Saddam Hussein's main plan, as the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] has also pointed out to me many times, is to drag Israel into this conflict, Mr. Speaker. God forbid that should happen. Let us all pray during our break that is coming up soon that our young men and women come home safely and that somehow or other we beat the sword of the Arabs into a plowshare without shedding blood; not an easy task, but good luck, I say to the President.

Mr. Speaker, I include the U.S. News & World Report article of June 4 in its entirety.

[From U.S. News & World Report, June 4, 1990]

THE WORLD'S MOST DANGEROUS MAN

In this strange season of political upheaval, with the lights of dictators winking out around the globe, the world suddenly seems a saner and safer place. But as Mikhail Gorbachev and George Bush confer this week, providing a little new hope for safety and sanity, in ancient Baghdad, half a world away, a dangerous man with great ambitions is hosting a summit of his own.

While Bush and Gorbachev are signing agreements to reduce their arsenals of chemical and nuclear arms, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, the host of the Arab summit, continues to spend billions of dollars in the pursuit and development of those very same weapons. What is even more troubling is that while the superpowers are trying to ensure that their bulging arsenals are never used, Hussein has already lobbed his nerve gas not only at his archenemies in Iran but at some of his own people, killing several hundred Kurdish tribesmen. It is no small irony that this new threat to peace and stability is coming from Mesopotamia, from the cradle of civilization, but if Saddam Hussein has taken note of the fact, he has not deigned to comment on it. He is not, after all, a man much inclined to humor. What he is, demonstrably, is the most dangerous man in the world.

In his ruthless and obsessive quest to become the "Sword of the Arabs," as Hussein lately has styled himself, he has relied upon the complicity of Western and other governments, the greed of middlemen, and the clandestine arms-procurement network with front companies in the U.S. and Europe. The Atlanta branch of Italy's biggest state-owned bank extended more than $1 billion in credit for Iraqi arms deals, U.S. officials say (page 45). A Canadian ballistics and rocket expert was helping Hussein build the world's biggest gun when he was mysteriously murdered in Brussels (page 48), and Iraq obtained hundreds of tons of a chemical used to make mustard gas from a Baltimore manufacturer before the transaction was caught by U.S. Customs.

The fateful combination that fuels Iraq's drive for military power is at once simple and familiar: Money, militarism and ego. With virtually unlimited funds from an oil industry that has an estimated 10 percent of the world's petroleum reserves, he has infinitely more cash to spend on instruments of destruction than Iran, Libya or North Korea. The U.S. intelligence community has consistently underestimated Iraq's military capabilities, but now a growing number of intelligence officials believe Hussein may have a nuclear-weapons capability in between two and five years (page 49). And unlike Kim Il Sung in North Korea, Hussein's ambitions are not contained by a powerful military on his border. His phenomenal military spending, estimated by some intelligence officials at as much as $50 billion over the past decade, has made him the world's single biggest buyer on the international market of chemical, biological and nuclear weaponry.

Even more frightening than his capabilities are the ample indications that Hussein has few qualms about using them. "I swear to God," he said in a statement printed around the world a few weeks ago, "we will let our fire scorch half of Israel if it tries to wage anything against us." Defenders of the Iraqi leader point out that he threatened to use force only in retaliation for an Israeli attack. But he is so isolated, both from his own people and from the international community, that no one knows for sure what he might do.

Worse, there is virtually no one, at home or abroad, who can restrain his worst impulses. He has few friends, even in the Arab world, and fewer and fewer within Iraq's own political structure. He has stubbed out rivals, real and imagined, like cigarette butts, and Western intelligence agencies have reported several instances in which he has pulled the trigger himself. Hussein committed his first murder at 14, attempted his first political assassination at 22, and there is not evidence to suggest he has broken the habit. The State Department calls Iraq's human-rights record "abysmal" and says the country continues to harbor several of the world's most notorious terrorists.

In recent years, moreover, what few constraints there were on Hussein have withered. The Ba'ath Socialist Party, which he rode to power, and the Revolutionary Command Council, which he dominated once he got there, have both fallen into decline, and more and more of the business of government is being handled by trusted members of Hussein's own family. Thus isolated, Hussein charts his own increasingly dangerous course. "He understands Iraq," says Amatzia Bar'am, a professor at Haifa University and one of the world's foremost scholars on Iraq. "But he doesn't understand how the American administration, Israel or Iran think. His advisers are afraid to give him bad news [and] * * * he is prone to make mistakes because he doesn't understand many things outside Iraq." With no back channel to Israel, the potential for a crisis arising from miscommunication seems especially high.

The growing numbers of Soviet Jews emigrating to Israel and the continued violence against Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza, and now in Israel itself, have inflamed the Arab world, and Hussein has suddenly returned to the conflict with Israel with a vengeance, hailed by his brethren as the only Arab leader willing to stand up to Israel.

A megalomaniac reminiscent of deposed Romanian dictator Nicolae Ceausescu, Hussein is no stranger to self-aggrandizement. Besides the ubiquitous posters of him around Baghdad, the city where Scheherazade once whiled away a thousand and one nights with her exotic tales, Hussein has taken to telling some tall tales of his own, styling himself in the image of the great Babylonian kings Nebuchadnezzar and Hammurabi. Like Ceausescu and Kilm Il Sung, he also likes titles. Before becoming the "Sword of the Arabs," he was the "indispensible leader" and "historical leader."

And now he is equipped to be as good as his word. Hussein's nonstop shopping has bought him a fundamental change in the strategic balance of the Middle East. No longer can Israel readily consider a preventive strike, as it did in 1981, when its bombers destroyed the Iraqi nuclear plant at Osirak. And military analysts say that with its fleet of missiles constantly being improved, by the middle 1990s Iraq will be able to hit targets inside Israel without entering Israeli airspace. "Are we as a state and as a people ready for this challenge and able to deal with it?" Retired Maj. Gen. David Ivry, the director general of Israel's Ministry of Defense, asked recently. "In my opinion, No."

How Hussein has managed this transformation is as much a measure of his own ruthlessness as it is of these-no-evil arms dealers around the globe, and of their respective governments that, almost everytime the capacious pockets of Iraq opened up, offered a free and friendly hand to make sure deals got done.

With French assistance, Iraq has built an entire electronics complex and can now construct its own integrated electronic circuits for use in missile-guidance systems and other military applications.

In the U.S., as elsewhere, the motive for helping Iraq get weapons has been greed. When Iraq was at war with Iran, the official U.S. policy was to "tilt" toward Iraq. But that did not mean U.S. companies could sell weapons to Iraq, which was designated by the State Department as a state sponsor of terrorism. Unfortunately, the legal prohibitions never seemed to amount to much.

SLEEPING POLICEMEN

In 1982, with an O.K. from the U.S. Commerce Department, Hughes Aircraft Company sold Iraq 60 small, bubble-topped helicopters for $25 million. The middleman was Iraq's most prolific arms broker, a genial Lebanese named Sarkis Soghanalian. In 1985, Soghanalian brokered another deal, this time for 26 McDonnell-Douglas-Hughes choppers worth $27.4 million and former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell assisted with the transaction. Again, Commerce approved.

The holes in the U.S. net were everywhere. In 1985, the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta (CDC) sent three shipments of something called West Nile Fever virus to Iraq. The virus causes wrenching nausea and mild fever, and it had infected two Israeli military installations. CDC officials note that it kills only 1 percent of those it afflicts, and they say they sent the virus to Iraq because they knew the doctor who requested it and believed it would be used for research. The CDC made no attempt to verify that, however, and congressional investigators inquired whether the virus might have been used in Iraq's biological-weapons program. In any event, the CDC has since re-examined its criteria for filling such requests, doctors there say.

Occasionally, but only with great effort, some of the holes in the U.S. net were plugged. In 1986, a Pentagon official named Stephen Bryen learned of a shipment of large analog computers to Iraq's Saad-16 missile-development complex. Commerce said the computers had no military use and approved the shipment. "We got hold of the advertising literature [for the computers]," Bryen says, "and it bragged about their military applications." It would take a year, but Bryen finally succeeded in blocking the shipment.

Just last year, there was another rare success. A London company that supposedly specialized in exporting mini-hamburgers to the Middle East approached a San Marcos, Calif., electronics firm and inquired about buying high-energy capacitors that could be used to help detonate a nuclear explosion. What would a hamburger outfit want with capacitors like that, the company owner wondered. He quickly alerted a U.S. Customs agent in San Diego, who posed as an export manager for the firm and proceeded to negotiate the transaction with three Iraqi government engineers and two employees of the alleged hamburger firm, Euromac, Ltd. Earlier this year, the sting operation hit pay dirt. All five persons have been indicted in the U.S. and Britain, but the three Iraqis have vanished, and Hussein himself has since boasted publicly that Iraq has obtained the same type of capacitors from another source.

What makes all this weaponry especially frightening is the fact that Iraq is rapidly acquiring an impressive arsenal of missiles to deliver it. With help from West Germany, Austria and perhaps Brazil, Iraq is pursuing both solid and liquid-fueled missiles and is believed to have spent well over $1 billion on the program so far. A joint missile program with Egypt and Argentina has largely been abandoned, but Iraq has taken elements of the program, called Condor II, to upgrade the guidance and warhead technology on its existing al-Abbas and al-Husayn missiles. "The bottom line," says Michael Eisenstadt, a military analyst at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, "is that the al-Abbas and al-Husayn will give Iraq the strategic deterrent capability that it needs."

FAMILY TIES

For this Hussein can be given much of the credit. He chose his No. 2 man wisely and placed him in charge of Iraq's Ministry of Industry and Military Industries. Hussein Kamil al-Majid is married to Saddam Hussein's daughter Ghard, and he supervised the expansion of the elite Republican Guard. A third man, Lt. Gen. Amer Hamoudi al-Saadi, has done a brilliant job overseeing Iraq's missile program. Both Kamil and al-Saadi have been wise, electing to build what can be built inside Iraq and buying the rest outside through front companies like the Euromac hamburger firm. "The Iraqis are doing the best job of any Third World country in collecting high tech in the military field," says Haifa University's Bar'am. ". . . Their fingerprints never appear."

Given the obvious dangers, it would seem imperative for the U.S. to try to impose whatever constraints in can on Saddam Hussein. But the Bush administration's view, in the words of John Kelly, the assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern affairs, is that "there is still a potentiality for positive alterations in Iraqi behavior." Others, in and out of the government, are not so sure. Some wonder about a potential attack on neighboring Kuwait, or on Saudi Arabia, if an attack on Israel does not come first. Others cite the brutality of the Hussein regime and ask why the U.S. does not take action to express its displeasure. "You accurately recite a chamber of horrors," Representative Tom Lantos (D-Calif.) told Assistant Secretary Kelly recently, "and then you sort of express the hope . . . that Iraq under Saddam Hussein will turn in the direction of being a responsible and peace-loving member of the international community." What Iraq is, for the time being, is the most dangerous and destabilizing member. Here is a glimpse of how it got that way:

FOLLOWING THE TANGLED MONEY TRAIL

The trouble that Banca Nazionale Del Lavoro has seen is no small matter. Former BNL officials are the subject of a grand-jury inquiry in the U.S., while at headquarters in Rome the bank's chairman and director general have resigned. Ten employes at the BNL branch in Atlanta have been fired. A half-dozen lawsuits have been filed. Still, BNL would be just another bank in hot water except for the fact that the business that got it there has much to do with the way the government of Iraq pursues and pays for sensitive Western technology. In this case, the $3 billion in unauthorized loans and letters of credit BNL's Atlanta branch issued would have been a wonderfully discreet way to finance a weapons plant, but it didn't quite work out that way.

It began with an ambitious American banker named Christopher Drogoul, BNL's Atlanta branch manager. He was driven, friends say, by suggestions from Rome that the branch would soon be closed. Before long, however, Drogoul found some Iraqi government representatives who wanted credit to pay for U.S. grain, frozen poultry and other commodities. Within months, BNL had extended them millions of dollars.

That deal marked the beginning of a relationship that would lead to 2,500 letters of credit and loans. BNL soon found itself underwriting an ambitious Iraqi shopping list, many of the items on it classified by Western governments as "dual use," meaning they have both industrial and military applications. Iraq, U.S. officials say, used as much as a billion dollars of BNL credit to purchase such equipment to build weapons. One American company, Lummus Crest of Bloomfield, N.J., was given $53.8 million in credit for construction of a petrochemical plant near Baghdad. Another, XYZ Options of Tuscaloosa, Ala., arranged to sell Iraq $14 million worth of machinery to make carbide tools, but was prevented from delivering a precision grinder after U.S. officials questioned its ultimate use. Still other funds went to finance the purchase of either high-tech companies themselves or the construction in Iraq of new factories that will soon become state property.

The transactions were complex. Take the sale of Matrix-Churchill. A British machinery firm, it hadn't made a profit in a decade. Nevertheless, the company was purchased in 1987 by TMG Engineering, which in turn was controlled by TDG, a subsidiary of Al-Arabi Trading, a Baghdad holding company with close ties to Saddam Hussein's government. Within two years, Iraq had used $16 million in BNL credit to purchase precision lathes and other equipment from Matrix-Churchill. TDG officials have denied that their company is controlled by the Iraqi government.

That wasn't the end of it. According to Britain's Financial Times a newspaper, TDG also had a hand in buying a Northern Ireland aerospace company, Lear Fan, which specializes in composite plastics, the kind used to make advanced airplanes and, conceivably, missiles. A partner in the deal was SRC Engineering, a company run by Gerald Bull, the arms dealer and engineer who had sold Iraq on his supercannon, known as the Big Gun. The new aerospace firm, SRC Composites, applied to Northern Ireland for a start-up grant of more than $1 million. British officials, fearful that SRC Composites' real mission was making missile parts, quashed the grant on Aug. 14, 1989, effectively killing the project.

The weapons laboratories of Iraq and the machinations of SRC and Al-Arabi Trading are a long way from Atlanta. There, Drogoul now faces the federal investigation and a racketerring suit filed by BNL. Drogoul's lawyer concedes that his client failed to report the proper loan-risk information to the Federal Reserve and the correct amount of the loans to BNL's New York office. But he says his client earned no bonuses or personal commissions on the business. For its part, BNL recently agreed to make good on the outstanding letters of credit in dispute, which means Iraq will get most of the technology it wanted. With results like this, there is no reason to expect that Iraq will stop its byzantine procurement practices anytime soon.

A MAKE-MY-DAY SUPERWEAPON

If anything galvanized the West's attention on Iraq, it was evidence that Gerald Bull, a renegade, naturalized-American artillery genius, was helping Baghdad build the world's biggest gun. But it wasn't until Bull was shot to death outside his Brussels apartment on March 22 with $20,000 untouched in his pocket—and after customs agents across Europe seized 298 tons of massive polished steel tubes headed for Iraq—that the mysterious project was revealed.

Bull himself was something of a mystery. He was given to hyperbole and self-promotion, but he was also brilliant and of unquestioned accomplishment. Born in 1928, he quickly established himself as a Canadian "whiz kid" in rocketry and ballistics. In the 1960s, he co-ran the U.S.-Canadian High Altitude Research Project (HARP) that fired probes into space with giant cannons.

One, in Quebec, had a 16-inch bore barrel and was 172 feet long. A 120-foot version in Yuma, Ariz., set a world record by shooting a projectile 112 miles straight up. The U.S., more interested in rockets, quit the project in 1970.

Frustrated, Bull turned back to artillery design. He helped South Africa build one of the best artillery pieces in the world, the G-5 155-millimeter howitzer and its long-distance pickle-shaped shell. He used artillery shells acquired from the U.S. Army, however, and in 1980 he pleaded guilty to smuggling embargoed arms to South Africa and spent four months in prison.

After his release, a bitter Bull moved to Brussels and met Sarkis Soghanalian, a Miami businessman who was selling arms to Iraq. Soghanalian says Bull soon was trying to interest the Iraqis in building huge guns. Apparently, he succeeded. Indeed, a British Customs official told U.S. News, two big guns had been ordered and one, code-named "Baby Babylon" by the Iraqis, already had been sent. It had a 16-inch bore and was about 120 feet long—the same size as one of the Bull guns in HARP. But it failed during testing in Iraq, and British Customs seized the replacement parts. The second, "Big Babylon," was to be the monster, 512 feet long with a 39-inch bore. It was to be built of 52 pieces; apparently, 44 of them already had been sent to Iraq when the others were intercepted.

Big Babylon would have been the fulfillment of Bull's dream—and Saddam Hussein's too. Such a gun, mounted at a 45-degree angle and shooting rocket-boosted projectiles, could obtain unheard-of distances—or launch satellites, as Bull wrote in a book published in 1988. He estimated that a three-stage rocket shot out of his smaller 16-inch gun could fly 5,000 miles. In theory then, the supergun would have been able to lob huge projectiles at Iraq's enemies for much less than the cost of ballistic missiles. The falling shells might penetrate antimissile defenses being built by Israel—surely an attractive idea to Hussein.

But would it have worked? Chuck Bernard, a former Navy rocket-and-ballistics expert who worked with Bull in the early 1960s, contends that what might be gained militarily by the gun's long range would be lost in its inaccuracy. And some military analysts argue that a monstrous gun pointed at, say, Tel Aviv would have been an easy target for Israeli bombers. Could it have been a launcher for spy or communications satellites instead? "We guess it certainly was intended as a launcher for satellites, but there's no reason to preclude launching anything else," said a British Customs spokesman. "Remember, what goes up might well come down."

HOW QUICKLY CAN IRAQ GET THE BOMB?

The most troubling single question about Iraq's growing arsenal is how close Saddam Hussein is to having nuclear weapons. The official U.S. estimate is that Iraq won't be a nuclear power for five to 10 years. But an increasing number of U.S. intelligence officials, as well as British and Israeli experts, believe Iraq could acquire a nuclear capability in as few as two to five years.

Baghdad is sparing no expense in its pursuit of the bomb. Following Israel's 1981 attack on Iraq's Osirak nuclear reactor, Hussein seems to have followed the example of Pakistan and China and begun seeking an easily concealed enrichment process that can produce weapons-grade uranium.

Using this method, uranium ore is first converted in a chemical process to uranium hexafluoride gas. Iraq already has 250 tons of uranium concentrate, called yellowcake, legally purchased a decade ago from Niger, Portugal, Brazil and Italy. The stockpile is not subject to International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) inspections. An Iraqi industrial complex at al-Qaim, built by European companies, which ostensibly processes phosphate ore, also has plants that can produce hydrogen fluoride that can be used to make nerve gas or to make uranium hexafluoride gas. Most press coverage of Iraq's nuclear effort has concentrated on 27 pounds of weapons-grade uranium that survived Israel's 1981 bombing, but that uranium is regularly inspected by the IAEA and is unlikely to be used for a weapons program except in dire circumstances.

A QUESTION OF TIME

The biggest missing pieces of the puzzle are how far Iraq has progressed in building a centrifuge plant for enriching uranium hexafluoride gas, and where the Iraqis are conducting their centrifuge research. The U.S. is fairly confident that Iraq does not yet have a prototype centrifuge plant running, and that belief is largely behind the 5-to-10-year estimate. But, says W. Seth Carus, a missile expert at the U.S. Naval War College Foundation and a longtime observer of Iraqi weapons programs: "If I were doing it and I were them, I'd have it in a place where you couldn't take pictures of it, underground and preferably in the side of a mountain."

U.S. officials admit that their assessment has another major loophole. "The estimate has a caveat—that they don't get significant assistant from abroad," says one administration expert.

But a growing body of evidence suggests that Iraq's nuclear program is getting considerable foreign assistance from West German companies, China and perhaps Pakistan. U.S. intelligence officials say Pakistan may be contributing to the Iraqi nuclear effort by providing Baghdad with vital expertise and technology for its uranium-enrichment program, in return for cooperation on acquiring restricted items.

The American nuclear capacitors that were confiscated in London last March, and a shipment of vacuum diffusion pumps that U.S. Customs officials seized in March, 1989, are both items that Pakistan may be seeking for a second enrichment plant it reportedly is constructing at Golra. Cardoen Industries, a Chilean arms company with close ties to Iraq, is suspected of transshipping sophisticated oscilloscopes from Europe to Iraq for testing detonating devices. Carlos Cardoen, head of the company, denies selling any oscilloscopes to Iraq. Officials in Bonn say a West German company, H & H Metalform, has sent equipment suitable for manufacturing centrifuges to Iraq, and at least two German technicians are believed to have helped Iraq assemble a plant for the equipment. U.S. intelligence officials say that China is helping Iraq to manufacture the special magnets needed to balance the centrifuges.

Experts say Iraq would need 1,000 centrifuges working for a year to enrich enough uranium to make one bomb. Synchronizing the centrifuges is a complex task: They fly apart if not aligned properly. And even if they work, they tend to break down easily. Special magnets are needed to minimize friction. Vacuum pumps and piping move the uranium hexafluoride gas from one centrifuge to another, in what is known as a cascade.

U.S. officials assume it will take Iraqi engineers time to master the mechanics and techniques needed to build and operate a centrifuge enrichment plant. But Simon Henderson, the former editor of MidEast Markets, believes Iraqi engineers, with their experience in Iraq's flourishing arms industry, will have less difficulty building a centrifuge plant than did Pakistan. "Making centrifuges work stretched the Pakistanis' capabilities, but it doesn't necessarily stretch Iraqi capabilities," he says.

How fast Iraq acquires a bomb also depends on what kind of nuclear device it wants. The fastest route, says nuclear expert Leonard Spector of the Carnegie Endowment, would be for Iraq to build a uranium bomb using an implosion method, as soon as it has amassed enough weapons-grade material. This type of bomb would require non-nuclear testing, but the tests could be conducted secretly in a building or underground. One or two unwieldy bombs might be enough to intimidate Iraq's Persian Gulf neighbors, but they would be unlikely to provide the deterrent Iraq wants against nuclear-armed Israel. More likely, Hussein will keep his program secret until he can build nuclear warheads, a more lengthy and complicated process but one that eventually could make him the most feared leader in the Middle East.

FROM BALTIMORE TO BAGHDAD

Dennis Bass was feeling good. The special agent for the U.S. Customs Service had put his reputation on the line to track 120 tons of poison-gas chemicals sent illegally from Baltimore through ports halfway around the world to Iran. Now, he could laugh, for his men had filled the chemical drums with water instead. "Can you imagine how the Iranians felt when they opened them up and all they had was water," Bass mused. "Maybe even the Ayatollah found out."

When Bass searched the offices of the chemical manufacturer, however, he got a nasty surprise. Documents buried in the files of Alcolac International, located in Baltimore, showed that Bass and his colleagues had missed a second shipment of chemicals used in the production of mustard gas. Nearly 300 barrels of the stuff, 520 tons, had gone not to Iran, but to Saddam Hussein's government in Iraq. "Here's a company in Baltimore," Bass said in disgust, "that's supplying both sides of a war effort."

Even with search warrants and a trip to Switzerland, it took Bass nearly a year to unravel Alcolac's web of dealings with Iraq. When he did, he found a network that stretched from Switzerland to Japan to the U.S. to Singapore, with a number of stops in between. It all began with Frans Van Anraat, a mysterious European businessman who ran a Singapore company that bought and sold chemicals. In 1984, Bass says, Van Anraat was introduced to Charles Tanaka, an export-import agent in Japan. Van Anraat was looking for a chemical called thiodiglycol, a key ingredient in mustard gas. Tanaka found some in Japan, and shipped it to Europe for Van Anraat, who sent it on to Iraq.

But in early 1987, as Iran and Iraq bombarded each other with chemical weapons, thiodiglycol became scarce. Tanaka couldn't get enough from Japan to satisfy Van Anraat and Iraq, and Iran wanted it, too. Tanaka turned to America, a riskier proposition because by then the U.S. had banned such shipments. Tanaka quietly called Harold Greenberg, a friend who ran a Brooklyn sheet-metal export business, and Greenberg sent his partner Nick Defino out in search of thiodiglycol. Defino got off to a bad start, Bass says, when he mistakenly called Morton Thiokol, a giant chemical producer. Defino started by asking to buy "thiokol." "You want to buy our company?" came the response. Eventually, Defino got things straightened out and hooked up with Alcolac. Up until then, says Bass, Alcolac sold only small amounts of thiodiglycol, which is also used in making ballpoint pens. The Defino-Greenberg offer was very attractive. They wanted to broker hundreds of tons, a million dollars' worth. Their cut would be 1 cent a pound.

Government documents show that Alcolac export manager Leslie Hinkleman and the brokers considered shipping it to Monrovia, Liberia, or to a nonexistent company in Antwerp. They finally settled on "Western Europe," labeling the chemical "textile additive." Where it really went, Bass says, Hinkleman didn't ask. Then, an Alcolac accountant heard that U.S. companies were illegally sending thiodiglycol to Iraq. He voiced concern, and top company officials stopped the shipments when they could not determine precisely where the chemical was going. The shipments to Iran continued, Bass believes, because the brokers' papers showed a legal destination—Singapore. In the end, federal charges were brought for export violations. Greenberg, Defino and Hinkleman pleaded guilty to one count each, and Alcolac could be fined up to $1 million.

But how to catch Tanaka and Van Anraat? Tanaka, it turned out, was easy. Customs had Greenberg tell Tanaka the coast was clear to return to America to sell Japanese fingerprint technology, of all things, to police here. When Tanaka stepped off the plane, he was nabbed. He later pleaded guilty. Van Anraat remains at large in Europe.

Back in Baltimore, Customs agents acknowledge that tips and dumb luck play a large role in finding such smugglers. Iraq is reaching out to companies all over the globe. Yet in all of Maryland, with the bustling ports of Baltimore and Baltimore-Washington International Airport, Customs has just five export investigators. Against that kind of competition, the odds against stopping illegal shipments to outlaw states like Iraq are long indeed. Bass is struck by how Iraq's vast arms network is built around an international network of middlemen who will sell anything for a buck. "If someone asked for bicycle tires, or someone asked for mustard gas," says Bass, "I don't think it would have made a difference to Frans Van Anraat."

A LOOPHOLE FOR A SECOND S&L DEBACLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, when Congress enacted the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act [FIRREA] last year, a principal purpose was to crack down on the highflying activities of savings and loans chartered by Federal regulators, and, most especially, those chartered by the States.

That law placed prudent restrictions on the ability of State chartered savings and loans which use Federal deposit insurance. The legislation limited the amount of loans to one borrower a thrift could make, limited direct investment in real estate and junk bonds, and set a reasonable standard for mortgage lending. In addition, it required the Federal Home Loan Bank system, of which nearly all thrifts are members, to pay its fair share of the costs of the FSLIC bailout.

Now, aided by some clever legal advisors and State legislatures eager to take advantage of Federal deposit insurance for thrifts, minus the restrictions of FIRREA, those essential reforms could be scuttled.

To get out from under the coverage of FIRREA, some State chartered savings and loans are simply converting to an organizational form known as a State savings bank. This relieves them from supervision by the regulator charged by Congress as the principal enforcer of FIRREA mandates for savings and loans, the Office of Thrift Supervision, and raises the possibility, depending on the prescriptions of the state legislatures involved, of an exemption from certain FIRREA restrictions.

If a loophole in FIRREA which allows the creation of State savings bank [SSB] is allowed to stand, we may be setting ourselves up for a repeat of the FSLIC disaster.

What could be the practical effect of a conversion from a State chartered savings and loan to a state savings bank?

First, conversion to a State savings bank would remove them from the FIRREA "loans to one borrower" limitation. This very important provision, which requires thrifts to have the same standard as national banks, is essential. Otherwise, State law could prevail for State savings banks, which could mean that a thrift could have most or all of its lending tied up with one borrower, a very dangerous situation.

Second, a State savings bank conversion would allow institutions to leave the Federal Home Loan Bank system, an option which almost certainly would be exercised by certain well capitalized thrifts. The problem with this is that FIRREA required the Federal Home Loan Banks, which are capitalized by the thrift industry, to pay their share of the bailout. If thrifts are allowed to leave at will, they will be shirking their contribution to that fair share payment. If the Federal Home Loan Banks do not contribute to the bailout costs the $300 million per year mandated by FIRREA, those costs will be shifted to the taxpayer.

Third, State savings banks would not have to meet the "Qualified Thrift Lender" test. This very modest provision of FIRREA requires thrifts to have 70 percent of portfolio assets invested in residential mortgage loans and related qualifying investments. Over and over during consideration of FIRREA, we heard that the thrift industry needed assistance due to the vital role it plays in mortgage finance. The quid pro quo involved is that if there is Federal assistance, that mortgage finance effort must be maintained at reasonable levels. This is not an unduly burdensome requirement. For the quarter ending June 30, 1990, the composite breakdown for the 47 State chartered Wisconsin savings and loans shows that approximately 73.8 percent of assets were mortgage-related—66.3 percent were mortgage loans and contracts, and 7.5 percent were mortgage-backed securities.

Fourth, FIRREA limits Federal and State savings and loans to invest only up to 400 percent of capital in loans secured by nonresidential real property. Shifting to a State savings bank would lift this limitation. In at least one State, for example, State savings banks are not now subject to any limitations on such commercial loans. That can be expected to be repeated.

Fifth, conversion of mutual thrifts to stock. OTS regulations severely limit the ability of mutual managers to purchase stock when a thrift converts from a mutual form of ownership to a stock form. Converting to a State savings bank removes this restriction, which opens the possibility to windfalls for well-situated managers.

Finally, conversion to a State savings bank raises the possibility that thrifts may exempt themselves from FIRREA restrictions regarding the purchase of junk bonds, a prospect which I know troubles greatly our colleagues from North Dakota, BYRON DORGAN, The principal author of the FIRREA junk bond provisions.

I want to stress that not all of these circumstances would occur in every State if this loophole goes unplugged. Some States might include restrictions in their laws. Others, however, might not. All States, however, would be rolling the dice with Federal deposit insurance, and the taxpayer could be asked, once again, to pick up the tab for mistakes made at the State level.

A handful of States have allowed for State savings banks for some time. Illinois, Indiana and Louisiana have enacted legislation since the passage of FIRREA which allows their establishment. The Wall Street Journal reported today that at least seven other States, including California, Texas and Florida, are considering such legislation. The Commissioner of Savings and Loan in Wisconsin recently announced that he will propose such legislation next year.

Mr. Speaker, now is not the time for such conversions. While there is indeed a need for an overhaul of the regulatory framework, not only for thrifts, but for banks and credit unions as well, Congress cannot allow an evasion of prudent safety and soundness rules included in FIRREA. Toward that end, I will be joining my Banking Committee colleague, Republican BRUCE VENTO of Minnesota, in drafting legislation to plug this loophole before Congress adjourns.

At this point, I would like to insert in the RECORD the Wall Street Journal article from today which describes the situation.

[From the Wall Street Journal Oct. 16, 1990]

STATE LEGISLATURES MAY BE CREATING LOOPHOLE FOR S&LS

(By Paul Duke Jr.)

WASHINGTON.—State legislatures may be opening a huge loophole that allows savings and loans to evade the regulations placed on them last year, federal regulators said.

The loophole, under which S&Ls change their charter and become savings banks, in some cases could permit thrifts to return to their risky past of junk-bond investments and aggressive real estate development, the regulators believe. The change in charters also would allow the institutions to escape one of two layers of federal regulation.

But state regulators and some trade group officials angrily denied they are trying an end-run around federal regulation. They said the thrifts are simply trying to cut costs by turning to less expensive state regulation and accused the federal regulators of engaging in a pointless turf battle.

Timothy Ryan, the director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, said he believes he can stop a stampede of thrifts through the loophole simply by declaring that the state legislatures are defying Congress's clear intention to rein in the industry. In an interview, Mr. Ryan promised to deny applications for a charter change in cases where he believes the motivation is to side-step the bailout law. But that approach is sure to be challenged in court. Meanwhile, some members of Congress may move as early as this week to pass legislation prohibiting such charter-switching.

"In my view, these efforts are blatant attempts to evade [the S&L law's] reforms," Mr. Ryan said in the text of a speech scheduled for delivery today in Chicago. He said he wouldn't allow Congress's intent "to be circumvented by misguided and manipulated state legislatures."

Many states had savings banks before the thrift law was passed last year. Mr. Ryan said he is most concerned about the states that have passed laws allowing thrifts to become savings banks since then—Illinois, Indiana and Louisiana. Similar bills are pending in at least seven other states, including California, Texas and Florida, the scene of some of the worst thrift losses. Many of the statutes, Mr. Ryan said, allow the thrifts to hold junk bonds and other equity investments, and get into real estate development.

The switches don't affect the thrifts' federal deposit insurance.

State regulators disputed the assertion that the savings bank charter allows thrifts to dodge federal restrictions. "That is the most specious argument they could come up with," said Sarah Hargrove, secretary of banking in Pennsylvania, home of two thrifts that have switched to savings bank charters since the thrift law was passed.

Ms. Hargrove said state-chartered thrifts face three regulators—her agency, the OTS, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.—and are interested in switching charters "to get rid of one of the layers."

John Seymour, the top S&L regulator for Illinois, said the OTS was driven by the "fear that healthy S&Ls will convert to savings banks and leave OTS with only unhealthy institutions to regulate." Mr. Seymour said the new Illinois law forbids savings banks from holding junk bonds and places restrictions on real estate development similar to those in federal law. However, the Illinois law does allow the savings banks to maintain a lower percentage of their assets—60%—in housing-related investment—than S&Ls, which must hold 70%.

Mr. Ryan denied that he was fighting over turf, noting that he isn't opposed to thrifts' becoming commercial banks because they are properly supervised and regulated. He conceded that some OTS fees are too high and said the agency is trying to bring down the costs.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE NEED A CHANGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, it was 1980 when I came to Congress. It was 1980 when Ronald Reagan was elected President of the United States. Sadly, not much has changed in the U.S. House of Representatives in certain respects in that period of time. We still see and were given a prime example of that earlier today, that Democrats not only control the U.S. House of Representatives, as they have continuously for the last 36 consecutive years, they still refuse to consider freezing, let alone reducing, domestic discretionary spending. There has been a blatant and open support on the floor of this House today, as there has been many times in the past 10 years and for many years past before that, for increased taxes in order to maintain the feeding of the discretionary domestic spending embodied in the budgets of the U.S. Congress.

I think this is very sad with the overwhelming population of the United States in favor of reducing domestic spending, with the desire of the people of the United States to keep their taxes down. We have the majority party in this country dominating this body, not only with its votes, but today with its arrogance, its arrogance to gag the minority and not even allow them to present their alternative on the floor for a discussion and debate and a vote, an alternative that would have reduced spending and would not have increased one cent of taxes on the American people and would have saved over a period of 5 years over $400 billion and cut our deficit in that proportion.

We had some people up here today, as they have often been before us, who had the unmitigated gall to tell us that we cannot reduce the deficit without increasing taxes. What they mean very simply is that those on the other side of the aisle, the Democrats, they themselves are unwilling to let us do that. We certainly can technically. All we have to do is cut spending.

The fact of the matter is that they will not let us do that. The fact of the matter is that today they talked about changing and having fairness in the tax system, when indeed they are rolling back the clock, what was passed today going back to what was known as bracket creep that we changed way back in the 1980s.

We tried to change the tax laws of this country then to protect the American people from inflation, so that you do not get inflated when your income goes up into a higher tax bracket. That is going to be withdrawn by the proposal that passed today as part of the Democratic package. We are going back, back to the system before, so that middle Americans have to pay more taxes; where, for example, in the next year a family of two earning $34,000 a year is going to have to pay 6 percent more in income taxes if this proposal becomes law. I think that is ridiculous, to say the least.

Then let us look at where they do think they are saving. When they talk about domestic cuts, they say, "Oh, we do want to cut domestic spending. It is in the entitlement area we want to cut, not the mini-appropriation bills."

They are talking about Medicare. They are talking about the fact that they are increasing the premiums that senior citizens have to pay for Medicare. There is no need to do that. The Republican plan would not have done that. Why do we need to tax senior citizens to pay so much more for Medicare, when they are the least who can afford it. It is ridiculous.

All because we cannot cut ordinary spending. I am talking about at least freezing spending, not spending a penny more for programs such as housing, the arts, the parks, and every agency of the Federal Government. If we had just frozen spending at the previous year's level and not spent a penny more in the next year, not having to cut actually any real spending, we would have wound up with a balanced budget over a 3-year period, almost any given 3-year period of the past decade. That has not happened.

It is absurd, it is absolutely absurd, so it is no wonder that the American people are coming to the position more and more that they want to see us limit the terms of Congressmen. They say "We have had enough with you guys, this nonsense, this zoo land. It is an unbelievable fairyland in Washington."

The fact of the matter is that I happen to concur with that. I cannot help but concur with that. I am in the minority. I have been in the minority this whole time, and I do not see where we are getting out of that position very rapidly, unless we get to the polling place and make big changes in who the majority is around here.

I mean, all but 4 years out of the last 60 years the Democrats have controlled the U.S. House of Representatives, 36 consecutive years, tax and spend, tax and spend, gag the Republicans and not let us get spending reductions, really a sad story.

Then we turn to the crime bill for a minute. We passed one on the floor of the House. We have not even gone to conference on that bill yet. That is a bill that we got a majority to vote on in this body because Republicans so strongly supported restoring the death penalty for Federal crimes and putting the death penalty in for drug kingpins trafficking in large quantities of drugs.

We changed the laws of search and seizure so you could get evidence in more easily, and we got a provision through that changed the opportunity for appeals and restricted that for death row inmates, but that has not gone to conference because there has not been a will of the majority to do that, and I suspect we will delay and delay and not have a crime bill out here the way we are going at all that will go to the President's desk. That is tough on crime this year. It is really a sad case.

Things have not changed a whole lot in the last 10 years in this House. They need to change. The American people need to have their voice restored. We need to get down to business, reduce spending, balance the budget in a responsible way, pass tough crime measures, and do the things that the people out there and the vast majority of Americans want to see done. It does not happen with a Democrat majority. It clearly is not going to happen. We need a change.

IN RECOGNITION OF GEN. ROGER SCHEER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize a great American, Maj. Gen. Roger P. Scheer, U.S. Air Force, upon his retirement on October 31, 1990, at the end of his tour as Chief and Commander of the Air Force Reserve. Major General Scheer has served the Nation well in war and in peace, for over 31 years. During his tenure as the Chief of the Air Force Reserve, which began November 1, 1986, the Air Force Reserve reached the highest state of readiness in the history of the Air Force. He ensured the total force policy was fully implemented by his reserve units, and was instrumental in making them full partners with their active-duty counterparts.

Knowing General Scheer as a warrior in the finest sense, he would rather be flying with his volunteers and mobilized Reservists in Operation Desert Shield. His leadership of the Air Force Reserve has ensured the readiness of Reserve personnel critical to the deployment of U.S. Forces to the Middle East. His skill, guidance and exemplary foresight in the planning, programming, budgeting and legislative process during the last 4 years has resulted in the modernization efforts he championed. A spirit of volunteerism permeated the Air Force Reserve and enabled their participation in the sustained airlift operations for almost 1 month prior to the Presidential call-up of the Reserve components. As a result of his leadership, this spirit allowed the Reserve to accomplish what had only been speculation previously.

During his tenure, the Air Force Reserve received many awards, such as Air Force Top Gun, Best Airlifters, Best Tanker Crews and Outstanding Airman of the Year. The Air Force Reserve, as a fully combat ready arm of the air force, participated in many major operations—such as Panama—Operation Just Cause—Honduras, Lebanon, and Libya—in addition to the current Desert Shield.

Major General Scheer entered the Air Force in 1957 and earned his pilot's wings a year later. He flew more than 200 combat missions in F–105's in Southeast Asia. After separating from active duty in 1970, he served in increasingly responsible leadership positions in the Air Force Reserve, culminating in his appointment as the chief and commander of the component. His military decorations include the Distinguished Service Medal, two Silver Stars, two Legions of Merit, five Distinguished Flying Crosses, the Meritorious Service Medal and nine Air Medals.

Mr. Speaker, Roger Scheer is a fine American, a loyal family man and a leader worthy of emulation. We shall be forever grateful for his dedicated contributions to our Armed Forces and to our country. We wish him and his lovely wife, Sandy, a joyful and prosperous life in military retirement.

VACATING SPECIAL ORDER AND GRANTING REQUEST FOR SPECIAL ORDER

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my 60-minute special order for today be vacated and that I instead be granted a 5-minute special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

WHO BENEFITS?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, there have been tremendous debates on the floor of the House today regarding the budget. Already we have had our economy aggravated by Operation Desert Shield, whereby some 200,000 American military troops and others from U.N. countries are supporting us in Saudi Arabia tonight. In connection with that, we have been trying to get many countries to help us. One of those who we have asked and who has come forth has been Japan.

Thus, last week there was a spate of stories about Japan's willingness to purchase United States-made supplies for use in the Gulf. Some people are viewing that with a great deal of optimism. Others are raising questions. I am one of those raising questions about what they are going to be willing to buy for the money that they pledged and what they are not.

If we recall, initially Japan offered $1 billion, and then with pressure from this House they raised it up and up. At the time the first $1 billion was offered, Mr. Yukio Okamoto, the senior foreign ministry official in overseeing Japanese-American relations, said, "Japan could under no circumstances increase its $1 billion pledge, even if war breaks out."

Now, that is a curious statement, Mr. Speaker. That offer has been raised up to $2 billion, plus $2 billion to countries hard-hit by the conflict, because of the efforts of Secretary of the Treasury Nicholas Brady.

But according to the Washington Post, critics of the Japanese effort joke "that it took Japan almost 2 months to ship a boat load of Japanese-built four-wheel-drive vehicles to United States forces in Saudi Arabia, but there was no corresponding delay in exporting cars to the United States."

That earlier shipment of 800 four-wheel-drive vehicles was part of the first $1 billion aid package—now the story in last Tuesday's Washington Post states, "Japan plans to 'buy America' with much of the $2 billion it has pledged to the United States-led forces in the region for equipment and transportation."

Let me clarify that figure for you. Japan earlier pledged $1 billion and now they have upped it to $2 billion. Did those 800 four-wheel-drive vehicles come out of this $2 billion pledge?

Just what will Japan provide for this money and to whom?

The Washington Post reports the "Japanese purchases in the United States are likely to include trucks, computers, television sets and prefabricated barracks."

If they are "buying America," do they intend to buy Zenith TV's. That is the only American television manufacturer we have, the rest are Japanese.

Do they intend to buy Honda trucks, or Chryslers? After all the Japanese were successful in getting Japanese trucks labeled as vans so they would be under the Japanese automobile quota. In this way Japan was able to undercut a profitable market for American truckmakers. Is Japan now going to say those so-called Japanese vans are trucks and ship them to Saudi Arabia?

Is Japan buying United States made prefabricated barracks or will it be a Japanese company in the United States which hires Americans?

To American citizens, a Japanese company located in the United States and hiring American workers, is not an American company. But, there appears to be some confusion on this point in our own Government.

It was the United States Trade Representative who went to Brussels and convinced the EC that Japanese car companies in the United States were American companies.

Will these same Japanese companies now benefit from this $2 billion? According to the U.S. Trade Representative, they are American companies—but Americans do know better than that. They are Japanese companies. All eyes will be on Japan as they make these purchases.

I can't help but recall that yearly one-half of the foreign owned companies in the United States have failed to pay the Internal Revenue some $35 to $50 billion—this together with the penalties, fines and interest would amount to more than $70 billion.

Japan is, according to newspaper accounts, "Hoping to avoid accusations that it is using the Persian Gulf crisis to stoke its export machine."

Mr. Yujio Okamoto, the senior Foreign Service officer I previously mentioned stated, "We cannot afford to be seen as taking another commercial advantage in assisting our forces."

There is some question about the additional $2 billion in aid to hard hit countries such as Egypt and Turkey. In offering the aid, they are also increasing their network for trade.

After all, Japan was already in Iraq to jointly develop four oil fields when this trouble broke out, and in June, Saudi Arabia had invited the Japanese in to develop an oil field.

Since Japan receives 70 percent of its oil from the Middle East, I would expect them to make a sincere effort to assist Operation Desert Shield. So, I take some exception to the reported statement of a United States official describing "Japan's decision to shop in the United States as a "generous gesture" from Japanese officials."

How generous do you call the American lives on the line in Saudi Arabia? How can you measure those young Americans against cars, TV's and prefabricated barracks? We had to twist arms to get the Japanese to come forward with more funds—and then it is not clear what they will actually do.

Again, I ask who will ultimately benefit in this effort—Japanese companies located in America? I hope they will be genuine American firms.

Up until now it certainly has not been Americans. I know the Japanese are spending millions to give themselves an "applie-pie" look in America and, their money is being wasted because until Japan learns to play by the rules.

Americans will be watching these purchases; and, I will be watching to see if these purchases are made from legitimate American companies. Together we can be an economic barometer for America.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] be able to exercise his right to the special order following my special order which I ask unanimous consent to take place following the special order of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE SAMUEL STRATTON

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my friend from California [Mr. DREIER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] for allowing the members of the New York delegation to proceed out of order.

Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to join with my colleagues from the State of New York in paying special tribute to a friend and a great American patriot, Sam Stratton. Samuel Strutherford Stratton was born in Yonkers, NY, on September 27, 1916. At the age of 3 months his family moved to Schenectady, NY, where he attended public school. He also attended Blair Academy prior to graduating from the University of Rochester in 1937.

He received a master's degree from Haverford College in 1938 and a master's in philosophy from Harvard University in 1940.

Sam was the administrative assistant to Congressman Thomas H. Elliott of Massachusetts for 2 years prior to being commissioned as an ensign in the U.S. Naval Reserve on June 6, 1942. Sam served as an intelligence officer for Gen. Douglas MacArthur in the Pacific Theater during World War II, during which time he was promoted to lieutenant. He received two Bronze Stars.

Sam spoke fluent Japanese and, following the signing of the treaty between the United States and Japan in Tokyo Harbor in 1945, Sam was the first American to interrogate Gen. Tomoyuko Yoshimato, who was later hanged as a war criminal. After the war, Sam was deputy secretary general of the Far East Commission of the State Department, where he met his future wife, Joan Harris, who was working at the Indian Embassy.

He was later recalled to active duty during the Korean conflict and was a captain in the Naval Reserve until his retirement.

After Sam's tenure in the State Department, he returned to Schenectady, where he was a radio announcer and one of the earliest television news commentators at WRTV.

You know, Mr. Speaker, Ronald Reagan was not the first TV actor to make it big in politics. At WRGB, Sam became known as Sagebrush Sam and bedecked in a cowboy outfit he hosted western movies for the child audience of the capital district.

He began in politics by being elected to the Schenectady City Council and was later elected as mayor of the city of Schenectady.

He promised to clean up local corruption, and he did that in a rather dramatic fashion.

Some capital district residents are fond of recalling one evening when Sam was sitting on his front porch at 51 Spruce Street in Schenectady. Someone tossed a rock from a passing car with a note attached to it. That note tipped him off that there was to be an illegal gambling party that evening at a downtown restaurant called the Victoria.

Sam staked out the place himself. Once he was satisfied that there was gambling going on, he called a squad car without telling him why he needed it. For, as he said, it would not have been a good idea to alert the police at that time because they were probably in league with the people running the operation.

The door was knocked down, arrests were made, and Sam's reputation as a crimebuster was secured.

Sam was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1958 and served in this body for 30 years.

Despite the best efforts of then-Governor Nelson Rockefeller to gerrymander or, as Sam called it, "Rockymander" him out of office, his last close election was in 1962, when he won with 54 percent of the vote.

Sam also sought the Democratic nomination for Governor in 1962, and the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate in 1964.

Throughout his 30 years in Congress, Sam served on the House Armed Services Committee. He is most often remembered for his efforts in this committee where his seniority and chairmanship of the procurement subcommittee made him a formidable force in the U.S. defense acquisition policy for many years.

His impact will continue to be felt for years to come.

His vivid remembrance of a bicycle trip through Europe shortly before World War II made an indelible impression upon him that the only way to deter aggression was through a strong defense. One could say that the phrase "peace through strength" was coined for Sam's view of the world. He never forgot his experiences in the war, and he constantly strived to prevent such an event from every happening again, by doing his level best to see to it that the United States would never again be unprepared to resist aggression anywhere in the world. His legacy in that area is great indeed.

Mr. Speaker, Sam also chaired the House Committee on Armed Services investigation of the My Lai massacre where two generals were reduced in rank for their part in the coverup of that tragedy.

Sam Stratton was also a man of vision. He led and won the fight to allow women into our military service academies, and, thanks to Sam Stratton, the American people can visit the historic West Front of the Capitol. Sam refused to allow its destruction, and he made it his personal cause to restore its historic edifice for future generations to enjoy.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, while we have come to appreciate 3-day holiday weekends, it was not always that way. Sam sponsored that legislation, and he changed the way America celebrates its holidays.

As for constituent services, I think my friends and colleagues who will speak in a few moments would agree that Sam Stratton wrote the book on constituent service. No problem was too small to gain his attention and his support, and in later years people would talk about the way Sam Stratton treated them and their problems, and some people would comment later on how Sam always gave the impression that he cared. Well, that is, Mr. Speaker, because he did care, and that is why he was so effective, and that is why he was so loved.

Sam passed away on Thursday, September 13, 1990, and is survived by his wonderful wife, Joan, his sons Kevin and Brian, and his daughters Lisa, Debbie, and Kim.

Sam was laid to rest with full military honors on Tuesday, September 18, at Arlington National Cemetery, just below the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Mr. Speaker, there will be many tributes to Sam. I was happy to sponsor an amendment to the defense authorization bill to name one of the future Naval destroyers in his name, and it is comforting for me, and I know for many Americans, to know that in the not-too-distant future patrolling the high seas there will be a Naval vessel called the U.S.S. Samuel S. Stratton.

In addition, yesterday in this House we passed another piece of legislation so that he will be remembered locally in the years to come. The VA medical center in Albany will henceforth be known as the Samuel S. Stratton Veterans Administration Hospital.

On October 27, many, many of his friends throughout the capital district will gather at the chapel at Union College to share their remembrances of this outstanding American.

Mr. Speaker, while it is natural that we morn his death, it is even more important that we celebrate his life.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in time I would like to yield to my senior colleague and dean of the Democratic delegation in the State of New York, Congressman JIM SCHEUER.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY] for yielding.

My colleagues, I would like to read a letter I received today from SONNY MONTGOMERY, the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

DEAR JIM: Today the House passed H.R. 5739 to name the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Albany for our dear friend, Sam Stratton. As you know, I was a strong supporter of this legislation. I wanted to be sure that you were aware of the passage of the bill. After consideration of H.R. 5739, the companion Senate bill, S. 3127, was considered and passed by the House. Today's action will allow for the redesignation of the Albany facility as the Samuel S. Stratton Medical Center.

Sincerely,

SONNY MONTGOMERY.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word about Sam. I think I knew him probably as long as any Member of the House. He and I served together in the very early 1940's in the Naval Intelligence Japanese Language School in Boulder, CO. Sam was an extremely diligent and hard-working student at Japanese and was extraordinarily specific for someone who was not born in Japan. We had young men at the school called BIJ's, born in Japan, sons of missionaries, sons of service personnel, sons of teachers, and of course they were bilingual. Sam was virtually bilingual by dint of his remarkable ear for languages and the extraordinary work that he put into acquiring the language from scratch. Over the years as we had known each other, I watched in awe as Sam kept honing his Japanese language skills. He would go religiously, and regularly and systematically to the Foreign Service Institute where Members of Congress can get individual language lessons of all kinds. I went from time to time, but Sam went almost weekly during his entire term in Congress, and in 1990 his Japanese was virtually as good as it was at the peak of his language skills, after he graduated from the Boulder school and put his language skills to the service of his country.

Mr. Speaker, that certainly shows Sam's determination when he focused in on a goal.

Sam had a wonderful capacity for friendship. During the years that we served together in Congress, approximately 25 years that we were here together, he preceding me by 6 years, we remained strong friends. Sam and I did not agree on everything. Sam had a prodigious commitment to the defense of his country and to the state of readiness and of its armed services, and he was an awesome supporter of all of the services, not just the Navy. And while we did not agree all the time on every issue, that never affected our friendship. Disagreements with his colleagues never affected his relations with them. He was the dean, not only because he was senior, but because he was held in such respect and affection by the junior Members of the New York delegation.

I want to express again my condolences to his wife, Joan, and to his wonderful children, and I want to tell them how much Sam meant to all of us and how much he will be missed in this House.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my senior colleague, and I know that Joan and the family are grateful to him for staying up at this late hour to pay tribute to our friend, Sam.

I would like at this point to yield to my senior colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY] for yielding, and I want to thank the gentleman for arranging this special order so that we could all pay our respects to Sam Stratton.

Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I rise to join my colleagues in commenting on the passing of one of our most distinguished colleagues and our good friend, the late Samuel S. Stratton, who brought great distinction to this Chamber for some 30 years.

Although Sam and I were both from upstate New York, and although we never represented adjacent congressional districts, I often looked to Sam for guidance and assistance with regard to some of the pressing concerns of our entire Hudson Valley. He was especially active as a spokesperson for the needs of the apple industry in our State, and for the continued economic growth of New York State and our Northeast.

Most importantly, Sam Stratton was this body's recognized leader in the national defense. Throughout his long career, Sam recognized that only a strong America could remain free.

Sam Stratton was born in Yonkers, NY, in 1916. Then as now, Yonkers was the fourth largest city in New York State, and represented a microcosm of the problems facing urban America in the 20th century, as well as of the benefits of urban life. Sam attended the University of Rochester, located in the third largest city in our State, and received his A.B. degree in 1937. He went on to earn a masters degree from Haverford College in 1938, and from Harvard University in 1940.

When our Nation was plunged into World War II, Sam was commissioned an ensign in the Naval Reserve. He served in the South Pacific on the staff of the legendary general, Douglas MacArthur, and for his courageous service he was twice awarded the Bronze Star. After retiring from the Naval Reserve with the rank of captain, he was called upon—served again during the Korean war.

Sam Stratton's lifetime of observing and experiencing life in New York State's smaller urban areas—first in Yonkers, then in Rochester—came into great stead in 1949, when Sam was elected to the city council of his new hometown of Schenectady. Sam served his community with unstinting devotion. His hard work was rewarded when he was reelected to the city council in 1953 and subsequently mayor in 1955. As the mayor of Schenectady, Sam Stratton earned a reputation far and wide as a battler against corruption and inefficiency. Interestingly, Sam supplemented his meager income as mayor by appearing on a number of local radio and television stations as a newscaster and announcer. He gained a bit of fame by playing "Sagebrush Sam" for the children in the audience, dressed as a cowboy, and playing a harmonica.

In 1958, Sam Stratton moved on to Congress. As was generally the case in those early days, his campaign was an uphill battle. But win it he did, and he remained in Congress for 30 years, through 1988.

In those early days, Sam was the only Democrat representing New York between New York City and Buffalo. Several times, attempts were made to redistrict him out of office. But Sam kept the affection and the loyalty of the voters no matter how the district lines were drawn.

Despite his electoral successes in Republican territory, the State Democratic Party mysteriously passed over Sam Stratton twice: In denying him the gubenatorial nomination which he fought long and hard for in 1962; and by choosing the U.S. Attorney General, Robert Kennedy, instead of Sam in a spirited struggle at the 1964 State convention for U.S. Senator.

But the folly of the New York State Democratic Party was to the advantage of this Chamber. By not losing Sam to the governorship or to the Senate, we were able to enjoy his wise counsel and his guiding leadership throughout his long and distinguished tenure in the House.

Sam Stratton will long be remembered for his outstanding service as a member of the House Armed Services Committee. Those of us who were Members of Congress at that time will long remember Sam's dramatic use of charts here in the well of the House as he instructed us regarding the dangers of disarmament. He was our leading authority on the military, and once stated in this Chamber: "If you are on a ship crossing the ocean, and it strikes an iceberg, you don't worry about improving the cuisine. You plug the leak."

Despite Sam Stratton's support for the military, he kept a realistic view on the limits of American power. For instance, he opposed our peacekeeping mission to Lebanon in the early 1980's. "I think military forces ought to be used in a military way," Sam said at the time. "The whole idea of a peacekeeping force is ill-conceived. We've got enough problems around the world to be wasting our military forces in an impossible situation where they're not able to do anything, and they're being maimed and killed."

Sam Stratton was the dean of our New York congressional delegation for several terms prior to his retirement in 1988. In this capacity we all came to rely upon his knowledge and his willing way to lend a helping hand to all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I join with our colleagues in expressing our sincerest condolences to Sam's widow Joan; to their three daughters, Lisa, Debra, and Kim; and their two sons, Kevin and Brian. Hopefully, their grief will be eased somewhat by the knowledge that many share their loss, and that the loss of Sam Stratton is the loss of one of the legislative giants of this honorable body.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] for his kind words. Of course, the story about the submarine district is legend in New York politics. As the gentleman might remember, that district stretched from Sam's home in Amsterdam all the way out to a suburb of Rochester.

That was at the point in time when both houses of the legislature were controlled by your party, and Governor Rockefeller was in the executive mansion. They were determined to eliminate Sam from Congress. If you took a look at the demographics of that district, Democrats were an endangered species in that district. It was heavily Republican. Sam went out and literally lived on the New York State Freeway out of a little car. He just went out and spent time going to all the little towns and villages along the way and became known to the people, and the people loved him, and he won the district anyway.

Of course, as Members know, in later years everybody just came up on trying to redistrict Sam out of office and put him back in the capital district and stated, "Let's forget about it." He was unbeatable.

I would now like to recognize someone who has had a very special relationship with Sam Stratton through the years and gave such a beautiful eulogy at his funeral, my senior colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I certainly thank the gentleman for yielding the time. Let me say to my good friends, the gentlemen from New York, Mr. MCNULTY and Mr. GILMAN, that yes, they tried hard to gerrymander poor Sam out of office, and they failed and they failed and they failed. Finally, when they did give up, I think they turned to GERRY SOLOMON and they gave me a district that is now 220 miles long, reaching from just outside of New York City almost to the Canadian border.

I would say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY], I do not want to wish you any bad luck, but maybe the State legislature in their infinite wisdom will give up on GERRY SOLOMON this coming year and maybe stretch MCNULTY out there again.

In all seriousness, I will not be repetitive of the fine remarks that have been said here tonight. Out of courtesy to many Members that have stepped aside so that this special order could be held early on this evening, and especially to the California delegation of which there are Members that will be participating here tonight on the anniversary of the terrible earthquake that took place, we thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], the leader of that congregation here tonight for stepping aside.

Mr. Speaker, let me commend my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY] for holding this special order for a very, very special man.

Sam Stratton is no longer with us, no longer with his beloved wife Joan, his children and grandchildren, no longer with his countless friends, no longer with the people he served for 30 years, no longer with those of us who had the pleasure to serve with him in this body.

But his spirit still fills this floor, this floor on which he was a model congressman.

Mr. Speaker, I know I speak for many here when I say that in all my years of local, State, and national politics, Sam Stratton was the man I most deeply admired and respected.

He had no peers when it came to knowledge and expertise in national defense issues.

I know my good friend SONNY MONTGOMERY will back me up when I say that when it came time to elevate the Veterans' Administration to the President's Cabinet, Sam Stratton was our staunchest ally on this floor.

Sam Stratton dedicated his entire life to making sure our national defense was second to none, and to making sure the veterans who made it the best, received a Nation's gratitude.

How fitting, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday, on the initiative of Congressman MCNULTY, we took steps to rename the Veterans' Administration hospital in Albany after this great American patriot.

How fitting that several weeks ago we voted to name a naval destroyer after him.

A former professor of philosophy at Union College, he was a learned man whose ability to reason things out, was his trademark.

The term "gentleman and a scholar" was invented for Sam Stratton.

But he was a man of action as well as a man of intellect.

He was an intelligence aide to Gen. Douglas MacArthur during World War II.

As a young mayor of Schenectady, he ridded that city of corruption.

So by the time he was first elected to Congress, he had a clear vision on what was needed to keep our enemies at bay, both foreign and domestic.

And when it came to the security of the United States, there was no such word as compromise in his vocabulary.

But it was his human touch that made him so popular at home.

Sam Stratton was the kind of man who would be at the gates of the General Electric plant at 7 in the morning after the election to thank the voters.

He was the master of the front porch kind of campaign.

And his constituents didn't just vote for Sam Stratton, they loved him, as I did.

He was my idol when I first came to Congress.

And I had the great privilege to work by his side for 12 years.

How many times have we found ourselves asking, no matter what the issue, how would Sam handle this? What would Sam do?

He was a great Congressman, a great American, and a great friend and Sam, I can't help feeling that you're listening, we all miss you more than words can say.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], and especially in recognition of the special friendship that he had with Sam. GERRY always talks about how much he admired Sam, but I happen to know that the feeling was mutual.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to recognize my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from New York for yielding me time on his special order.

Mr. Speaker, I guess I first became aware of Sam Stratton around 1961, maybe early 1962. At that time I was a young lawyer with a law firm where one of my partners, John "J.B." Shea, was the Democratic State committeeman from the assembly district where I was active in Republican politics. Naturally, we always talked together about political goings-on in our county and in our State.

□ 2320

Jack Shay was very enamored of Sam Stratton and thought that Sam would be an extraordinary candidate for the Democratic Party in the 1962 governoral election, and it was through Jack that I first learned really of Sam Stratton and the enormous hold he had on the people of upstate New York. I guess it was fortunate for those of us on the Republican side of the aisle that Jack's dream that Sam Stratton would be the governoral candidate in 1962 did not come to pass, but it certainly brought to my awareness the high qualities that Sam Stratton had and the tremendous affection in which he was held in the upstate area.

I was not to meet Sam until I came down here following my election in a special election in February 1978. Shortly after that Sam became the dean of our New York State delegation. At that time I think our delegation had something of a reputation as one of the most fractious of all of the delegations in the Congress. I hasten to add that that fractiousness was not along party lines at all, but particularly in New York City there were a lot of strong personalities, and it was not easy for the dean of the New York delegation to get all of us in harness and working together on behalf of the State. I think it is a tribute to Sam Stratton that he was able to turn that around, and that he was able to turn a delegation which had very much of a reputation for backbiting and infighting and not advancing very well the cause of its State into one that could work together, could fight together, could stand together on the floor of the House, and could make a difference on behalf of the State of New York.

That is perhaps just one small part of Sam Stratton's contribution to the State and to the country. But it is one that I am happy to report on here tonight, and I again thank my friend for making this time available to me.

Mr. MCNULTY. I thank the gentleman for his very kind words about Sam and for participating in this special order.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to a Member who is not a New Yorker, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], to say a few words about Sam, and without his graciousness, along with that of the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], we would not have been able to proceed in such a timely fashion.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I will just briefly underscore the fact that this is something other than a New York tribute to our great friend, Sam Stratton. There was tremendous geographic affection for Sam here in the House of Representatives, and two things come to mind when I think of Sam.

I first came here in 1981, and at that time I was working on some special security issues. My friend from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], knows very well that we were working diligently under Ronald Reagan's leadership to rebuild our national defenses. And Sam Stratton clearly played an integral role in that action.

At that time a weapons system that was built in my district, still is, was being hotly debated. It was the Stinger anti-aircraft system. My friend from California [Mr. BROWN] is well aware of the development of that which takes place in the area which we represent. And the chairman of the Defense Appropriation Subcommittee, another New Yorker, the late Joe Addabbo, had not been a strong proponent of the Stinger system.

Sam Stratton helped me, and on my first amendment we were able to successfully ensure that the Stinger anti-aircraft system was maintained in that appropriation bill, which was very important because it has played a major role in the Soviets' withdrawal from Afghanistan and in other spots of the world, and the Stinger anti-aircraft system has been heralded all over.

As a freshman Member I stood in the well as a California Republican, and this strong, intelligent, hardworking New Yorker, Sam Stratton, helped me pass this amendment, and I will never forget the assistance that Sam provided to me at that time.

One other item comes to mind when I think of Sam, which of course was the role that he played in this battle, and you remember very well, others do, that took place in this place as to whether or not we are going to expand the Capitol or restore the Capitol. And Sam Stratton was one who took the well and vigorously argued in favor of restoration, maintaining this beautiful and historic structure as it is, rather than expanding and building more of these offices for Members of the leadership on his side of the aisle. And he won that battle, and he did it with the support of many of us on this side. But he had some very eloquent arguments which he provided during that debate, and I will never forget that.

He was a great friend to many of us, and I miss him, as do other Californians, and others from throughout this country.

I thank my friend from New York [Mr. MCNULTY] for very generously allowing a Californian to step in among all of these great New Yorkers to pay my little tribute to Sam Stratton.

Mr. MCNULTY. I thank the gentleman. He certainly demonstrates that Sam Stratton was loved, admired and respected coast to coast.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a little bit to the South and yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia

[Mr. GINGRICH], the minority whip of the U.S. House of Representatives.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, let me just thank my colleague from New York and say that I felt it was a great honor when I was a junior Member to be allowed to serve with Sam Stratton. I felt that he represented in a sense a great tradition, much as Scoop Jackson did, of a person who was very passionate about helping poor people in America, and very passionate about defending America, and he was able to stand firmly for both. I found it a great joy to work with him over the years, particularly on Armed Services matters where we had a number of fights where we were on the same side and tried to get things done.

I just want to say I appreciate very much the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY] taking the time tonight. I know that not just in the New York delegation but among Members on both sides of the aisle who care deeply for this country's survival that Sam Stratton, as long as we serve in Congress, Sam Stratton's spirit is going to be here, because he really did have an impact and an absolutely fearless willingness to stand up for what he believed in again and again. So I just want to thank the gentleman for taking this time tonight. I regard it as a signal honor that I was able to be here on the floor and to join in.

Mr. MCNULTY. I thank the gentleman very much, and again I am deeply appreciative of him and my colleague from California allowing us to proceed out of order.

Mr. Speaker, I will now yield to another New Yorker colleague to the west of me who happens to represent much of the territory that Sam Stratton formerly represented, by colleague, SHERRY BOEHLERT.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and for taking this special order to pay tribute to an individual for whom I had the greatest respect and affection and admiration, Sam Stratton.

I was first exposed to Sam Stratton in 1964 when I came to this House as a young staffer, full of hope and promise and great expectations. And I knew Sam Stratton then by reputation, and I quickly was privileged to be introduced to him on a personal basis.

I was a staff member. He was a Member of Congress, and in a lofty position, highly regarded on the Armed Services Commitee. But he took time to spend with me, to sort of get my juices flowing, to excite me about the process and what it was all about, to demonstrate to me that he really cared. And there are people in this institution, and he personified them, who really care about making this country a better place to live.

I know so often we mention Sam Stratton's great work on the Armed Services Committee and his determination to guarantee the national security of the United States. But he was a multidimensional man. It was not just his great work on the Armed Services Committee for which he will be remembered for years and years to come, but he also had a heart as big as all outdoors. And later on in my career, after I advanced from the staff stage and became a Member in my own right, and he was my neighbor, I would go to him for guidance, because although he was a Member of the other party, he was a neighbor and he was a friend and I respected him. And he would give me his best advice, and so often on some of the sensitive social issues, I remember the passion with which Sam Stratton would say to me that we have to do it for all of the right reasons, and we did. And many of those bills and laws that are now the law of the land are lasting tributes to Sam Stratton's commitment to making life better for all of us.

In terms of his influence in shaping national security policy, Sam Stratton was always to me an adviser. I would go to him and I would seek out his counsel, and more often than not I would find that I would be very supportive of the position he articulated, because he had sound reasoning.

He had sound reasoning. It was not just that he wanted to say yes to everything the Pentagon or the Department of Defense wanted. He would say yes, because, and then he would explain it to me very systematically why we needed a given weapon system, why it was important for our national security interest, and I would listen, and I would respond.

I consider it one of the great privileges of my life here in this Congress, both as a staff member and as a Member of the House of Representatives, to have had the privilege of working closely with Sam Stratton. He tutored me. I learned a lot from him, and I would like to think I am a better person because he has touched my life.

I know this institution is a better place for all of us because of Sam Stratton's presence, and I thank my colleague for taking this special order to pay tribute to a truly great American who will long be remembered.

Mr. MCNULTY. I thank my colleague for those very kind words, and I know Joan and the members of the Stratton family are deeply grateful to you for your friendship to Sam over the years.

Mr. BOEHLERT. If the gentleman will yield further, I forgot something very important. Much has been made about the various attempts to redistrict Sam Stratton, and I think at one time or another he probably represented half of the real State and the great Empire State.

I found, when I first started campaigning in 1982 in my own right for a seat, I would come into small towns and I would go to a Republican gathering, and the first thing people would ask me is, "Do you know Sam Stratton?" I would say, "Yes, I do know him. I have had the privilege of meeting him." "Please, convey our best wishes." I would come back as I was a freshman in Congress after going to places like Norwich and New Berlin and Sherburne and communities like that, and good, solid Republican territory, and I would have my pockets stuffed with notes to say hello to Sam from Joe, say hello to Sam from Mr. and Mrs. So-and-so. They liked and respected him as all people who knew him and respected him.

Mr. MCNULTY. Indeed, they loved him, and I thank my colleague for those kind words.

From upstate to downstate, I would like to move to the eastern tip of Long Island and yield to my colleague, the gentleman from the First Congressional District of the State of New York, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER].

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from the Albany area.

I am very pleased to join my colleagues, both Democrats and Republicans, tonight to say words about Sam that are true and meaningful.

You know, in the last 45 years we have probably not had a better opportunity for world peace with the thawing of the cold war than we have today. Certainly we have situations like the middle East and we have the Muammar Qadhafis to deal with yet in the future, but clearly we have never had a greater opportunity for world peace among the superpowers than we have today, and that was not accidental. That happened because millions of people in this Nation were willing to serve and to lay down their lives, if necessary, and certainly it comes because people in Congress were willing to stand up and provide for a strong defense.

My colleagues, there is no question that Sam Stratton played a key role in the defense of our Nation. I served with Sam on the House Armed Services Committee, and I was one of those junior Members that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER] referred to earlier, and certainly Sam counseled me. So I am very proud to have served with him.

He is a man whose life made a difference, and I think as future generations share a more peaceful world and a more peaceful future, it will be clear in his story that Sam made the difference and played a key role.

I was proud to serve with him. I am certainly proud to have called him my friend, and I am very proud to call him a New Yorker, and I thank my colleague for setting aside this time so that we could say the words that are so necessary and appropriate to be said about Sam at a time like this.

He was a great fellow, a great man, and I am very proud to have served with him. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCNULTY] for setting up this time so that we could say the words that are so appropriate to Sam.

Mr. MCNULTY. I thank the gentleman for his kind and beautiful words about a great American and a great patriot and certainly a great friend to everyone in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to again thank all of my colleagues from California for being so kind as to allow us to go out of order and my colleague, the minority whip of the House of Representatives, for giving us that opportunity and, finally, to say thank you to Joan Stratton, to Lisa, Debbie, Kevin, Bryan, and Kim for sharing Sam Stratton with us and the country for so many years.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with my colleagues in the House of Representatives in paying tribute to the late Hon. Samuel Stratton, whose death was a tremendous loss to the people of our Nation.

Congressman Sam Stratton served in the House of Representatives for 30 years, from 1959 through 1988, as a Congressman from the State of New York, and I was honored to have the privilege of knowing and working with Sam during the 24 years we served as Members of Congress together.

Sam Stratton was an outstanding American who dedicated his life to public service. He began his career as a secretary to a Member of Congress for 2 years in 1940, and during World War II, he distinguished himself as a combat intelligence officer in the South Pacific on the staff of Douglas MacArthur. He also served in the Korean war.

Serving on the Schenectady City Council from 1949 through 1956, Sam Stratton also conscientiously represented the citizens of Schenectady as mayor of the city from 1956 until his election to the House of Representatives in 1959 from the 23rd District of New York.

As a Member of Congress, he developed a reputation for maintaining our country's strong military defenses, and ably represented his constituents until his retirement from Congress in 1989. Perhaps one of his greatest victories in Congress resulted from his persistent and tireless fight to prevent the demolition of the west front of the Capitol. The west front today stands beautifully restored largely due to Sam's efforts.

Yesterday, in recognition of the achievements of Congressman Sam Stratton, the House of Representatives with my support approved a bill designating the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Albany, NY, as the "Samuel S. Stratton Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center." This legislation has also been approved by the Senate, and has been sent to the President for his signature into Public Law.

Congressman Sam Stratton was a man of great tenacity, determination, courage, and personal integrity, who will be sorely missed by all who had the opportunity of knowing him.

Mrs. Annunzio and I extend our deepest sympathy to his wife, Joan, and the other members of his family who survive him, on their great loss.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues today in paying tribute to Sam Stratton, our former colleague from Albany who passed away recently. After his 30-year tenure in the House, Sam left a legacy of diligent constituent work and ardent support for the Pentagon and the national security of this Nation.

Sam was the eipitome of what a Congressman should be. He was quick to respond to the needs of his constituents and his knowledge and integrity earned him the respect of both Republicans and Democrats alike.

Sam and I first became friends during my freshman year in the House 28 years ago. Sam's office was across from mine and, though he was a Democrat and I a Republican, he took time to show me the ropes. Over the years our friendship grew as we worked together on various projects.

Sam showed the same helpfulness to other Members of the New York delegation, both Republicans and Democrats alike. Sam's bipartisan spirit set the tone for our delegation and molded it into the cooperative unit that it is today. Though he was from upstate, it was Sam Stratton who brought us together during the fiscal crisis of New York City.

I was truly honored when my colleagues selected me to take Sam's place as chairman of the delegation when he retired at the end of the 100th Congress. Filling Sam Stratton's shoes is a mighty task, but I have committed myself to following his example. Since I had worked with Sam as the delegation's vice chairman for several years, the decision to follow the tempo he had set was not hard to make.

For someone who accomplished so much for his constituents and the State of New York, Sam had to fend off a couple of efforts to redistrict him out of the Congress. At one point, his district stretched from the Albany area over to Ontario County, which is just south of Rochester. This district was sliced several times by the famous Finger Lakes making travel very difficult. I now represent two of the counties which were once in Sam's submarine-shaped district. Even today, nearly 20 years since he last represented them, the people of Seneca and Cayuga Counties recall with fond memories the work of Sam Stratton. I have tried to live up to Sam's legacy here as well.

My wife Nancy and I were indeed saddened by the death of Sam Stratton. We both felt a tremendous personal loss. Our heartfelt condolences go out to Sam's wife Joan and their five children.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, after 30 years of swapping stories and fighting in the trenches with a man, you get to respect his force and his vigor. Sam Stratton was a man of supreme energy in every aspect of his career on the Hill. We did not see much of the weather man flash from his earlier career. What we saw was a man that came to the point quickly and firmly. There was no mincing of words, no suffering the fool. He was a man dedicated to the upstate New York way of cutting to the heart of a problem or an issue. He loved his country deeply and felt he had a special mission in providing for this Nation's defense.

He cared for the service men and women of this Nation and dedicated his years on the Armed Services Committee to getting the best equipment possible in the hands of our troops.

Once, while taking testimony on a new tank gun to be built with the cooperation of the Germans, he asked the Army's witness why they continually wanted to make tank ammunition bigger and heavier since the men who had to load it were not getting any bigger. As a result the Army continued to improve the current tank ammunition instead of going to rounds a soldier could not lift.

Sam was not a junketeer, but he did go on some interesting trips and got into some interesting situations that showed his fearless courage. While at the South Pole, he was told that the aircraft on which he was leaving was to nose down for take off. Sam suggested that everyone move to the back to weigh the tail down and off they went.

He was a resourceful man who would forge ahead no matter what troubles faced him. It was refreshing to have such a man in our midst and for so long. Honesty, integrity, and grit were his hallmarks. When you dealt with Sam it was tough, but fair, hard pressed, but with a sense of purpose. We will miss that craggy countenance telling us to get our money's worth in defending the Nation.

To his family and friends we give our heartfelt thanks for allowing us to have this gifted, dedicated colleague with us so long in this body. We miss deeply his character and countenance in this body.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my New York colleagues, FRANK HORTON, JIM SCHEUER, and MIKE MCNULTY for taking this time to pay tribute to our friend, Sam Stratton.

Sam's wife, Joan and his family gave me the opportunity to deliver one of the eulogies at his funeral here in Washington on September 18.

Sam was one of my best friends. We worked together on the Armed Services Committee, where I had the chance to see Sam's strong conviction that we must deal from a position of military strength. He was one of the most knowledgeable men on military matters to serve in the Congress. Besides being on the Armed Services Committee, he knew the military from firsthand experience. He served with General McArthur in the Pacific Theater in World War II, where he won two bronze stars.

He will always be remembered for being a leader in opening up the military service academies to women. And, he was a friend of the National Guard and Reserve. When he was chairman of the Procurement Subcommittee, he was the first to earmark money for the Reserve components to give our National Guard and Reserve units across the country the chance to train on new equipment.

I recently visited our troops in Saudi Arabia and I could not help but think of Sam when I saw all the good equipment our soldiers had on the ground, our airmen had in the air and our Navy had at sea. Because of his work on the Procurement Subcommittee for a number of years, these young men have the proper equipment to fight and defend themselves.

Sam will also be remembered for almost single handedly stopping the demolition of the west front of the U.S. Capitol several years ago. That action was proposed as part of the work to restore the Capitol, but Sam said "no" to tearing down the west front and he prevailed.

Sam was from the old school. He didn't rely on staff to do his homework. He was always well prepared and knew more about the subject at hand than the experts. I never saw him duck away from a floor fight on defense matters, and he had the kind of forceful personality and strong voice to be a formidable advocate for his position.

Sam Stratton was a great American. I am proud to have had the chance to serve with him on the Armed Services Committee and in this House of Representatives.

Again, I thank my colleagues for taking this time to honor our friend.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, my late friend, Sam Stratton, was a man's man in the classic sense. He was not only a good friend and trusted colleague, but I admired his determination and grit. As we all know, he was not someone to back off. He was no wimp, and this was especially the case when it came to defending his beloved America.

I didn't always agree with Sam. Our voting records will indicate this fact. But on one thing we always agreed; namely, that the United States of America is only as free and strong as the willingness of this Congress to keep us free and strong. And, when the role is called "Up Yonder," let it be said with a trumpet blast and a sound of mighty thunder—Sam Stratton was the patriot's patriot. He had a love affair with America, and America's security and defense posture is the better for it.

I had the great privilege to serve with Sam on the House Armed Services Committee for almost 20 years, and this association brought us into close contact on the myriad of issues that the committee must face. We often spoke about this Nation and its ability to protect itself from aggression. He was a wonderful historian, and he lived history. He was a part of history, and in fact, he often told me of the circumstances surrounding his key role in interrogating some of the Japanese war criminals after World War II. One of the most heinous of those criminals, Gen. Tomoyaki Yamashita, who bled the Philippines, was interrogated by Sam Stratton after the war, prior to being hung for his horrible crimes.

Let me also point out the fact that Sam and I held the rank of captain in the U.S. Naval Reserve. Sam believed in a strong maritime presence for the United States, but he did not favor the Navy to the exclusion of the other branches of the Armed Forces. His commitment was to the total force concept of defending America in an often hostile world. He possessed great vision in this regard, and because of his constant struggle to give our men and women in uniform the best training and equipment available, we can feel secure.

I miss Sam Stratton. I miss his wisdom and counsel. America misses him. And, when it's all said and done, this is the best epitaph for a soldier of America.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in mourning the passing of our good friend, former Congressman Sam Stratton. Sam served in this body for 30 years, and I was honored to serve with him for 16 of those years. He was a dedicated public servant who had earned the respect of his constituents as well as his colleagues in the House of Representatives. Sam was an honorable man who loved his country. As a young naval officer he served in World War II and was called again to active duty during the Korean conflict. His highly decorated service contributed to his success as a member of the House Armed Services Committee and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems. He was recognized as a leader on defense issues and annually spoke at my luncheon for military academy appointees. Because of Sam's expertise he was able to give these future officers an excellent picture of what to expect in their military careers. His appearance was always the highlight of these annual luncheons. To Sam's widow, Joan, and his sons and daughters, I extend my deepest sympathy and prayers.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, we in the House of Representatives lost a good friend and the Nation lost an outstanding former Member of Congress with the passing of our colleague, Sam Stratton of New York.

We all respected Sam for his personal touch in pushing for legislation he deemed necessary to provide a strong defense for this country. He always was supportive of the White House, whether it was governed by a Democrat or a Republican, on issues dealing with national defense.

While some other Members of the House were willing to let our defenses slip in the wake of the war in Vietnam, Sam Stratton spoke out and was a leader in the struggle to maintain a strong defensive posture for the United States.

For 30 years, Sam Stratton served his country in this House of Representatives, and at the time of his retirement in January 1989, he was the dean of the New York delegation.

And he served his country in war as well. During World War II, he was in the U.S. Navy on the staff of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, and was decorated with two Bronze Stars. With the outbreak of the Korean war, he went back on active duty. He retired as a captain in the U.S. Naval Reserve.

With his military background, it was only natural he would seek and be given a position on the House Armed Services Committee. Besides fighting for a strong defense, he also led the committee's investigation into the My Lai massacre. He pushed landmark legislation allowing women to attend the national military services academies. And he will also be remembered as one of the leaders who created the 3-day national holidays the country now celebrates.

We send our sympathies to his widow, Joan, and to his five children.

Sam Stratton was our friend and he will be missed. Let it be known that he served his country with distinction in peace and in war.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, as a member and now chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I rise to honor the late Hon. Samuel S. Stratton, our former colleague who was buried recently at Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors. During Sam's 30-year tenure in Congress, he devoted his entire committee experience to the work of the Armed Services Committee. For that reason, we on the committee—staff as well as members—mourn his passing like that of a member of an extended family.

Most of Sam's career life was spent in public service: As an intelligence specialist in World War II on the staff of General MacArthur and as a member of the Naval Reserve with active service during the Korean war and continuing service until retirement as a captain; as mayor of Schnectady, NY; and as the U.S. Representative of the 23d District of New York from his election in 1958 to his retirement at the conclusion of the 100th Congress.

I will remember Sam best for his expertise on national security matters as a member of the House Armed Services Committee—expertise that grew over the years from his service as chairman of three permanent major subcommittees; no fewer than five special subcommittees; and as a member of 16 subcommittees or panels that covered the entire range of committee jurisdiction from weapon systems to personnel.

Sam was extremely dedicated to his work in behalf of the defense of this Nation. He was knowledgeable to an amazing extent about virtually every facet of our defense system. He was a powerful advocate who possessed the strength of his convictions, and he was vigorous and courageous in his approach to vital defense questions and their solution.

Let me give just a few examples of Sam's energy and dedication. He played a major legislative and intellectual role in such diverse areas as strengthening the NATO alliance, modernization of Guard and Reserve forces, pursuit of verifiable arms control agreements, protection of the defense industrial base, development of missile and aviation programs, and improvement in the military medical care and military justice systems. Through his singular and distinctive efforts, Sam was successful in seeing enacted into law the requirement that women be admitted to the Nation's service academies.

Sam knew what his goals were at all times, and he had the ability, experience, strength of character—combined with high resolve and patriotism—to perform his duties as he honestly conceived them, in building the strength of this Nation and protecting and defending its security and its posture in the world. Indeed, some of the weapons he so strongly advocated are now the mainstays of our defense posture in the Middle East in these trying times. I pay tribute to Sam today for his foresight and leadership.

It is proper and fitting that the Nation recognize the contributions to its national security of this great public servant by naming the next guided missile destroyer (DDG-51) the U.S.S. Samuel S. Stratton. In a sense of Congress provision included in the fiscal year 1991 Defense Authorization bill, passed by the House on September 19, we, as a body, expressed our desire and intention to honor our former colleague for his outstanding service in this visible manner.

To his wife and helpmate, Joan Stratton, and her fine family, I offer my deepest sympathy on their loss.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to my friend and former colleague Sam Stratton. Sam died on September 13 at the age of 73, less than 2 years after his retirement from this institution in which he served with unparalleled vigor, commitment, and dedication for 30 years.

Sam represented his district in upstate New York with great dignity and honor and earned a record of genuine accomplishment. At home, his desire to help people and his opposition to politics-as-usual made him immensely popular. In Congress, his knowledge of defense matters earned him the true respect of Members from both sides of the aisle.

I strongly believe that Sam's unyielding commitment to our national security played an important role in the momentous events we have witnessed around the world in the past 18 months. The collapse of communism, the triumph of democracy, and our position as the leader in what promises to be a better world is due to those, like Sam, who remained firmly and unalterably committed to advancing the cause of freedom.

Sam was dedicated to keeping America strong and prepared and, over the years, I came to count heavily on his advice on defense-related matters. Sam's knowledge and experience, which made such a difference in so many legislative battles, were deeply missed after his retirement. In fact, this was clearly the case last year, when my Long Island colleagues and I worked to preserve production of the Grumman F-14D "Tomcat" fighter, the Navy's workhorse aircraft.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues who are gathered here tonight know, Sam's service to his country was not limited to his 15 terms in the House. Sam was commissioned as an ensign in the Naval Reserve in 1942 and served on the combat intelligence staff of Gen. Douglas MacArthur during World War II. He received two Bronze Stars and was later recalled to active duty during the Korean conflict. In 1949, Sam's career in public service began with his election to the city council of Schenectady, NY. He built his reputation through his determined efforts to fight corruption and racketeering and was rewarded by being elected mayor in 1955.

Sam was blessed with a large and loving family that was always a source of great pride to him. I want his wife Joan, his sons Kevin and Brian, his daughters Debbie, Lisa, and Kim, and his eight grandchildren to know that they are in my thoughts and prayers.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, for those of us across this country who look forward to that occasional 3-day holiday weekend where we have an unaccustomed extra day to spend with family, to forget about work or catch up on it, or to simply go off fishing we have Sam Stratton to thank for the eminently sensible legislation that changed the way we celebrate our holidays. The same Sam Stratton, the passionate and sensible legislator, led and won the fight that would break long-held tradition and open the doors of this country's service academies to women. Of course Sam's work over his 30 years in Congress encompassed many, many more accomplishments but to me these best exemplify the kind of spirited man Sam was. Sam worked hard, and after the strategies had been plotted, the positions reasoned and argued, and the votes cast and the work complete, Sam played hard. As in all things, Sam believed in balance and fairness. I had the distinct honor and pleasure to serve with Sam Stratton for 10 years on the House Armed Services Committee and to learn a great deal from him, because, after all, he had 20 years experience on me. Sam's knowledge of the issues was formidable, and his opponents, especially, knew and respected that. His commitment to our national defense was unwavering and above all, sensible. No sensible man wants war and having experienced it himself in the Navy in World War II and Korean, Sam was determined to see that it should never happen again. Our lives were made better and our world safer by Sam Stratton, and that, I think, is the highest compliment we can pay.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a former colleague, and friend, Sam S. Stratton, who passed away on August 13.

Sam served ably in the Congress for 30 years [1958 to 1988]. He also served ably the people of the Schenectady-Amsterdam district in New York.

Sam Stratton will be remembered in Congress for his commitment to military and defense issues. In fact, upon retirement, Sam ranked third in seniority on the House Armed Services Committee, and served as chairman of its Subcommittee on Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems.

Sam served in the U.S. Armed Forces, earning the Bronze Star in World War II while serving under Gen. Douglas MacArthur as an intelligence officer in the South Pacific.

When Sam returned to Schenectady, NY, he began his career in public service on the city council, and then as mayor. He was noted and respected for his efforts to fight crime in his hometown.

During his years in Congress, Sam made his mark legislatively by, among other things, creating the 3-day Federal holiday weekends and allowing women to attend national military service academies.

Mr. Speaker, Sam S. Stratton was a man of conviction, intellect, and compassion. He served nobly the people of his district and the country. I extend my sympathies to his wife, Joan, and their five children. I was proud to have known and served with Sam Stratton. His loss is a great one.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today in paying triubute to Samuel S. Stratton, one of the most distinguished individuals to serve in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Sam Stratton fought hard for what he believed was just and fair, even if it meant crossing partisan and ideological lines. Sam and I had our disagreements, particularly when it came to defense policy, but I always admired the strength of his convictions and his steadfast loyalty to the constituents he represented.

During World War II, Sam served in the Pacific as a naval combat intelligence officer for Gen. Douglas MacArthur. For his distinguished service as a member of an elite group of interrogators, he was twice awarded the Bronze Star. After the war, Sam returned to Schenectady and broke into local politics by winning a tough battle for a city council seat in 1949. That difficult race, in which he successfully challenged the local Democratic machine and the Republic Party, saw the beginning of the door-to-door campaigning Sam would continue for the rest of his political career.

He went on to become mayor of Schenectady and earned a well-deserved reputation as a crusader against crime and corruption. He was elected to Congress in 1958, becoming the first Democrat elected from the Schenectady-Amsterdam area in 42 years. In his subsequent 30 years as a Member of the House, he represented five different congressional districts in New York as a result of Republican redistricting. These unsuccessful attempts to oust Sam prompted his famous phrase, "I always run scared."

In Congress, Sam's passion was defense policy and he argued his beliefs eloquently on the Armed Services Committee for many years. Sam led that committee's arduous investigation of the My Lai massacre, which led to the demotion of two Army generals. At the time of his retirement, Sam was the third ranking member of the Armed Services Committee and chaired its Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems Subcommittee.

But Sam was not one-dimensional. During his 15-term tenure, he succeeded in granting women admission to the United States military academies, led the triumphant battle to preserve the historic West Front of the Capitol, sponsored legislation that placed national holidays on Mondays, supported a national minimum welfare payment, and pushed for economic sanctions against South Africa.

Of the many assets he possessed, I believe Sam's greatest strengths were his closeness to the electorate and his ability to respond to his constituents' needs. His successor from New York, the distinguished Mr. MCNULTY, said it best, "Sam wrote the book on constituent service."

Nearly a century and a half ago, during divisive debate on slavery, Missouri Senator Thomas Hart Benton boldly opposed calls for his State's secession. Benton defended his unpopular stance by stating, "I value solid popularity—the esteem of good men for good action. I despise the bubble popularity that is won without merit and lost without crime." Sam Stratton enjoyed "solid popularity" in the Congress, in his home State of New York, and in all his personal relationships. The entire Nation shares the loss of this celebrated patriot, dedicated public servant, and loyal friend.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to participate in the special order paying tribute to our departed former colleague, Sam Stratton. It was a genuine pleasure for me to serve on the Armed Services Committee with Sam for about 10 years and he was someone that I greatly admired. He was a man of principle, a patriot if I ever saw one. He fought for a strong defense for America and it is appropriate that our good friend Sam has been posthumously honored by the naming of a ship and buildings among other things, that will bear his name. Sam Stratton made his mark for the good of the Nation during his 30 years as a Member of the House of Representatives. We have been saddened by his passing, but relish the fond memories of a man who was so dedicated to doing the things that are right for our Nation. The funeral service held at Fort Myer was a beautiful memorial that surely was a comfort to his wonderful family. I want to join my other colleagues in extending deepest sympathy to Joan and the entire family. Sam Stratton's memory will continue to live with us in the Congress.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order tonight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PLANNING AND PREPARATION FOR RESPONSE TO EARTHQUAKES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, the hour is late, but I believe it is very important for us to recognize an important distinction which is coming about tomorrow. As we sit here today, I have not heard the final score of game one of the series, but it was seven to nothing when I last heard, Cincinnati over Oakland, but I think it is important for us to recognize that a year ago tomorrow we were at game three of what was called the Battle of the Bay as was just told to me by my friend from the San Francisco Bay area, the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL], and at that time we all remember looking at the television and seeing the screen blacked out because of the Loma Prieta San Francisco Bay area earthquake that was 1 year ago tomorrow.

I have taken this special order out this evening to underscore the importance of responding and to talk a little bit about how things have developed in the past year, talk a little bit about the situation that took place in my district 3 years ago, the Whittier Narrows quake which was a 5.9 earthquake, and really where we go from here legislatively in this House, how we have the Federal Government prepared to respond to this kind of disaster, and I am going to go through a few of those things.

But because it is now 11:36 eastern time, I am going to begin by calling on the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN], my distinguished colleague from southern California who has been very involved in this issue for many years, serves on the Science and Technology Committee, has introduced legislation which deals with this issue and has jointly participated in a number of forams with me over the past year when we have sometimes agreed and sometimes disagreed over the direction that we are going to head in this country when it comes to the issue of insurance, and that is, of course, my distinguished colleague from the San Bernardino County-Riverside area, right near the San Andreas Fault.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague very much for his participation and arranging this special order on the anniversary of the Loma Prieta earthquake.

I want to thank him even more for the very strong and intelligent leadership that he has given to this national problem over the last period of time, the last several years.

I suspect that all of us are sensitized to the problems of earthquakes when one happens to hit in our district, and he and I both live in an area which is susceptible to earthquakes and have had the opportunity to experience them.

The Loma Prieta earthquake probably has done more to broaden our knowledge of the effects of earthquakes than any similar event in my own history, and I have been following earthquakes for the last generation. It showed us the wisdom of proper planning, proper zoning, proper engineering.

We could see in the effects of that earthquake in various parts of the region, some near to the epicenter, some far from it, the effects of building on, for example, improper soil or not having the proper engineering and construction on a major freeway which would allow it to collapse.

□ 2340

So we learned a lot from that. But what has happened, in a more general way over the last several years is that the entire country has become aware of the problems of earthquakes, and the entire Congress has become more sensitive to this problem. We see that reflected in the fact that, for example, now we have in New York a major earthquake research center. California regretted not having it in California, but nevertheless, I think it has been extremely helpful in broadening the base of earthquake research and broadening the understanding of the importance of doing something about earthquakes to broader regions of the country.

We have become aware of the fact that earthquakes can strike many other parts of the country, and we see now frequent references to the so-called New Madrid earthquake.

Mr. DREIER of California. Reclaiming my time on that point, I would like to underscore what my friend has said, and that is that clearly there are 39 States of the 50 States which are very likely to suffer from earthquakes, and that is something that I think is important for Members to recognize again. The gentleman and I, and the the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL] are here as representatives from California. We are fortunate to be joined by our New York colleague [Mr. BOEHLERT]. Many people believe this is a California phenomenon, and that because of the fact, why should we be concerned about it.

As my friend from California [Mr. BROWN] refers to the New Madrid Fault, in 1811 and 1912, the worst earthquake that the United States of America has ever seen hit the New Madrid fault running through the Midwest part of the country. Actually, it was my original home State of Missouri that was affected by that. I think it is a very important point.

Mr. BROWN of California. If the gentleman will yield further, that earthquake centered in Missouri, of course, if it occurred again today would affect a broad area of the central part of the United States, including what is now the major population center in that area which is Memphis, TN.

Of course, we have seen a great increase in the interest of the congressional delegation from Tennessee as the result of their awareness that the fault which caused the New Madrid earthquake now we know is likely to break again in the reasonably near future.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the hour is late, and I know that the other Members have a great deal to contribute on this. I am going to shorten my remarks as much as possible. I just wanted to say one additional thing about the contribution which my distinguished colleague from southern California has made in this area. That is in the area of earthquake insurance. I think we have come to recognize that one of the indispensable elements in preparing for future earthquakes and mitigating the damages that they cause, particularly the financial hardship, is a strong national earthquake insurance program. This is something which we need to study. The insurance industry has become aware of the importance of doing something about it. I would say in the last year the most important activity with regard to our national preparations for earthquake has been a keener interest in how we can, through a program of national low cost insurance, do something to spread the risk and to mitigate the financial hardship that comes about as a result of earthquakes.

I want to commend my colleague for the excellent work that he is doing. I look forward to working with him in developing legislation in this area in the next session of Congress. I think it will do a great deal to help the entire country understand how we can get better prepared and take cognizance of the difficulties and the tragedies caused by earthquakes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for his contribution, and I would especially like to thank him because as we sit here at a quarter to 12, I know that my friend has just this morning come off of the redeye, which those Members from California often travel, leaving late at night and arriving here very early in the morning.

Mr. BROWN of California. I appreciate the gentleman mentioning that. My wife is probably watching this on C-SPAN, wondering why I am not at home. Now she will understand that there are other more important things that we have to do here. I further relish this opportunity because some Members are more accustomed to participating in these late night shows than I am, but it is a very valuable experience. I appreciate the opportunity.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the friend for his able contribution. He was absolutely right in the statement that he made that we become involved when our district is affected, and the gentleman said that I had been involved for several years.

Well, it was really October 1, 1987 that I first became involved. That was when the 5.9 Whittier Narrows quake hit in the district which I represent, and that really played a role in launching my involvement in this issue. I hope that we are able to spark the interest of other Members of Congress who will not have to go through situations like my friend from California and I, and one example of that is the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], who has demonstrated an interest in the issue. I assume that his district has not been affected by a quake, or any tremor that is like the one of those Members in California, and I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleagues from California [Mr. DREIER and Mr. CAMPBELL] for arranging this special order. For as large a tragedy as the Loma Prieta earthquake was, a larger tragedy would be having learned nothing from the death and destruction it left in its wake.

Fortunately, we have learned. The San Francisco quake jolted Americans from coast to coast into recognizing the hazards of earthquakes.

Earthquakes are not just a California problem. The worst earthquakes in the continental United States occurred in the Nation's mid-section, around New Madrid. Serious quakes have occurred in Boston and Charleston, and much of the east coast is seismically active.

We in the East cannot sit back and view quakes as someone else's problem that we might get involved in out of some sort of charitable impulse. We have to be involved.

We cannot prevent earthquakes, of course, and it will be a long time before we're much good at predicting them. But we do know a lot about how to prevent death and destruction from earthquakes and we have a pretty well organized research agenda to fill in the remaining gaps in our knowledge.

But applying that knowledge and conducting the right research will take concentration and commitment and money. The House a few weeks ago passed a bill, H.R. 3533, that indicates that we finally recognize that fact. The bill, which reauthorizes the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program [NEHRP], has now been conferenced with its Senate counterpart and could come to the floor this week.

The bill came out of the Science Subcommittee on which I serve as ranking Republican and on which Mr. CAMPBELL is an active member, and we are very proud of this measure. For the first time, it sets clear priorities for the Earthquake Program and provides spending authority which is both adequate and realistic. The impact of the bill should be that fewer people die and less damage is done by future earthquakes.

There's also been progress on another front. Both Mr. DREIER and I have introduced earthquake insurance bills. While there are significant differences between the Swift-Dreier bill and the Brown-Boehlert bill, they both reflect a recognition that more must be done to protect buildings from earthquake damage. And all the sponsors have expressed a desire to increase the level of earthquake hazards mitigation.

So those who lost their lives or property in Loma Prieta did not die in vain. They have made us all realize the fearsome power of earthquakes and the need to take steps—nationwide—to limit their impact. I look forward to working with Mr. DREIER and Mr. CAMPBELL to ensure that those steps are taken.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for his contribution on that point. I would like to underscore, once again, mentioning the quake which affected the eastern seaboard as well, reminding Members of the New Madrid Fault line and the effect it had in 1811 and 1812, and as many have predicted, will happen again in possibly the next 10 to 50 years, something that the American people need to be aware of. The gentleman's presence here this evening underscores that it is not simply a regional problem, and also, his activity on the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology has been very important on this.

I remember very well testifying on behalf of the legislation which my colleague from Washington State [Mr. SWIFT] and I have jointly introduced. I look forward to working with the gentleman in the years to come on this.

Mr. Speaker, as we actually are here on the anniversary of the Loma Prieta quake, I cannot help but think of the activities that came from one particular office in the San Francisco Bay area delegation. I will never forget that I was glued to the television that night watching the reports that came out, and in literally the middle of the night on NBC I saw my colleague from California [Mr. CAMPBELL] who was giving a report, having already been in touch with people in his district. There is no doubt about the fact that his district was the one that was overwhelmingly devastated. Not all of the attention went to his district, but the devastation was tremendous in his area.

□ 2350

He was tireless in his efforts to address the needs of his constituents in all northern California, and while it was not always heralded in all the newscasts, I will tell you that the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL] was the person who was on the front line battling this issue.

In the wake of the quake, there was the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL] dealing with the Small Business Administration, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and other Federal agencies, in coordination with the California Office of Emergency Services.

I am very pleased that the gentleman has made the sacrifice to stay up beyond the closure of the Washington Metro System to be here and participate in this special order.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague yielding to me. I very, very deeply appreciate his kind introduction.

As an environmentally conscious individual, I do not drive an automobile in the District of Columbia, and as a person of limited means I also find it useful to ride the Metro. As a result, I will not ride the Metro tonight because we are past the closing. I appreciate the gentleman commenting on that.

Let me say in a word of response that it was my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] who arranged for this special order. It was his farsightedness that led to the drafting of the insurance bills that are now before my committee. I compliment the gentleman for his ability to reach beyond his district, reach beyond his State, our State, to recognize the importance of earthquake preparedness.

I am also pleased to add a word of recognition and praise for my vice chairman on the Subcommittee of Science and Technology, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT].

The earthquake of October 17 cost 63 lives and 3,700 injuries. The damage is still being counted a year later. Much of the attention went to San Francisco because that was the area perhaps of the most dramatic damage.

I had the privilege to represent the mountainous area, however, which extends down the spine of the peninsula of California from San Francisco all the way to the San Jose area. The area that I represent includes some of the areas most damaged by the earthquake, because the people who live there were the poorest. In that area of the California peninsula you have a mountain and the people who live in and around that particular area, living in homes that are perhaps not always up to code and certainly not the most expensive in the entire area, they make do with what they have.

So in a very unfortunate turn of nature, it was the poorest who were hurt the most. It turns out, of course, that is almost always how nature hits, whether it is a hurricane or a tornado or an earthquake.

The first lesson I learned was that the importance of help for those most in need extended to those whose homes literally slid down hills. They wanted to build them up again and in many cases today, Mr. Speaker, as we are here on the 1-year anniversary, their homes are not yet rebuilt.

So in preparation for tonight, I made a few notes of what things perhaps might be done better. I am asking my colleague, the gentleman from California, to indulge me as I list a few of these, and I would certainly invite his participation in any respect as I go through them; but the point of doing so is that we not forget. The point of doing so is that we learn so that when the next one comes, whether it is in Missouri or California, Charleston, SC, or Loma Prieta, we will not suffer 63 dead, 3,700 injured.

Perhaps the most important point is the concept of liquefaction, that is to say the geological process in which hard ground becomes for a moment soft, liquefied. It was an absolute map from 1906 to 1989 that would indicate the areas most likely to be damaged, because it was once again those areas of landfill or those areas on the sides of cliffs that suffered the greatest damage.

When liquefaction occurred, the factors are, are your foundations built in such a way as to move when the Earth moves, or are they built in such a way so that they break when the Earth moves?

Had every building, had every home been built according to 1980 earthquake standards, had we in other words applied the information and knowledge that we had derived from so many previous experiences, it is very likely that we would not have had any deaths, except those on the Cypress structure in Oakland, and that deserves special mention as well.

For example, in the Redwood City area and the Foster City area, we had a number of new homes built on landfill which did just fine because they moved when the Earth moved.

So I applaud the efforts of our Science and Technology Committee to devote research to finding out how structure affects damage.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I would simply underscore the importance of that study which the Science and Technology Committee has embarked upon.

This summer, we will recall, there was an earthquake which took place in the Luzon Province of the Philippines. Worst hit was a resort community called Baguio. In late August traveling with Senator LUGAR in the Philippines, I had the opportunity to fly over Baguio and look at the damage that hit that area, and it was devastating. This was a very hilly area. It points to the fact that this kind of research, with a degree of success, could play a role in responding to the crisis not only here in the United States, but in other parts of the world.

We, of course, know the horrible earthquake which took place in the northern part of Iran and the Soviet Armenian earthquake, and most recently this earthquake that took place in the Philippines. Thousands of lives were lost in that Baguio area.

I saw these homes which crumbled down these hillsides, and obviously construction was not to any standard at all at that time, but this kind of research that the gentleman's committee is pursuing could play a major role in addressing the problem internationally, and I thank my friend.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his point. I would note that this was 7.1 on the Richter Scale, but of exceptionally short duration. Had the Loma Prieta earthquake been of the duration normally associated with an earthquake of that Richter Scale, we would have had many more tests of the proposition that structure determines damage. We were extremely fortunate. The next quake that will hit is more likely to be along the fault structure immediately east of the Bay. I only look at that with great fear and at other Cypress overstructures and other instances where we perhaps are not learning as quickly as we should.

There is another aspect which is very important in the damage area, less so in the question of saving lives, but that is are we adequately set up with our Federal Government institutions to deal with damage to historic buildings.

Mr. Speaker, I regret to say my conclusion is we are not. Whereas I have overall positive things to say about FEMA and certainly nothing but positive things about the dedication of the volunteers who work for FEMA and gave so much of themselves, I am troubled in a number of respects.

First of all, FEMA's attitude toward historic buildings has been that the restoration can be done so that it is a serviceable building, but not necessarily to the level that it is again restored to the historic structure that it was as well.

I am also troubled at the delay we have encountered from FEMA. In my own district, the Watsonville Hospital is still awaiting determination whether the damage to it will be compensated by FEMA, and in my own district of Scotts Valley, a dispute ranged for over 6 months between the Department of Transportation and FEMA as to who was responsible for damage done to a bridge on a State highway.

Incidentally, at that point let me applaud the excellent work of Secretary Sam Skinner who was on the very first plane out to the bay area with Vice President QUAYLE, and in a personal meeting with me subsequently undertook the responsibility of reconstructing the bridge in Scotts Valley.

In moving to another Federal agency, the Small Business Administration, again my highest regard to Susan Engeleiter, the Administrator, but let me observe some difficulties with which she had to work.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that the limits on SBA loan insurance for an individual are $100,000 for homes lost by an individual? For a building of a commercial nature, $500,000.

Mr. Speaker, it perhaps does not compel as much compassion as it should when I make the remark that $100,000 does not go very far in buying a home in California. Sometimes that statement is greeted with the comment, "Well, that is too bad. You are too expensive out there." But if you bear in mind that people who, say, put their life savings into a home and then with our rapid appreciation in value might seen an investment of $30,000 become $100,000 in the space of a year or two, and that is actual history in terms of the property values, you would suddenly find your ability to rebuild the home you had far, far constrained by reason of the $100,000 limit.

Mr. DREIER of California. Of course, it is history at this point because we know the real estate market in California is not moving in that direction as we stand here this evening.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Regrettably that is so. On the other hand the point remains that the person whose house was damaged as of 1989, who needs $200,000 to rebuild it, might have bought it for $25,000 and say that that person is rich and can take care of it himself or herself is fallacious.

Yes, I too long for the days of increased real estate values as long as I am the one owning the home and not attempting to buy.

The other point I wanted to make on this one issue before passing along to another was that the Small Business Administration—and again I applaud Administrator Engeleiter—was willing to support the effort to increase that insurance limit, but regrettably the support was lacking in other parts of the executive branch.

We have another problem with the rebuilding of homes in a seismologically damaged area, a seismologically difficult area, and that is that SBA will not extend credit until a seismological study, geological study has been done. I have no problem, find no fault with that. It is essentially a wise move. But bear in mind that in some instances in Santa Cruz County and Santa Clara County geological studies have not yet been completed.

So going back to my initial instance, people who were deprived of their homes 1 year ago are in many instances still not allowed to return to them because the study, the geological study, has not yet been completed.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me imperative that in planning for any earthquake disaster in the future, FEMA be given explicit authority to fund as soon as the Earth has stopped shaking the geological studies necessary and adequate to determine whether rebuilding can take place.

This was not the case, and so months passed and people kept out of homes during that delay.

A third specific that I draw upon is interestingly a lacuna in the law, one that is very meaningful to the people of the Loma Prieta area, and we call it the summit area between Santa Clara County and Santa Cruz County. Most of the water, not most but a large portion of the water, let us say, supplied by private water companies. They are not public utilities. Yet they are not intended to nor do they make a profit. They simply charge what it costs and continue their business year after year.

Because they are not public utilities, they are deprived of the immediate assistance under FEMA, and so they are put to the task of getting funding from the Small Business Administration. But because they make no profit, they cannot show themselves to be creditworthy. And the standard for an SBA loan to a commercial enterprise is, "Can you pay it back,"

The only alternative is the one available under the emergency grant subsidized by the people of California themselves through the Office of Emergency Services.

But this surely is a lacuna that needs to be fixed in the law. A public utility in every respect except that it is technically not so should still have available funding from our Federal relief agencies.

Lastly, a fascinating problem dealing with the restoration of homes of classical beauty and of much sentimental value, of course, to their owners and those who have called them home, in San Francisco, Los Gatos, and Santa Cruz particularly. Because these homes would be removed from their foundation, an Old Victorian, for example, it is no longer habitable. To restore it, put it back on its foundation, may cost more than the owner has in disposable funds. And it may cost more than the $100,000 that I referred to earlier.

If, however, the $100,000 is enough to place the home back on its foundation, we frequently found that the present owner of one of these beautiful Victorians or smaller Victorians or smaller homes of different styles, would lack the means to pay it back under the normal SBA schedule. The reason was that they were no longer employed. Senior citizens who spent all of their lives working hard, putting aside savings so they could buy their homes, in an instant, 1 year ago tomorrow, found that their homes were no longer habitable, and because they had no more income stream from employment, they were unable to satisfy the SBA standards to repay the loan.

Now the answer to this is intriguing as it is clear. We should consider reverse mortgages. It is precisely what is happening in the commercial field, particularly for senior citizens in this condition, where in order to make up for, let us say, an immediate need for cash, perhaps for a medical need, a senior citizen who has completely paid for his or her home is unable to do a reverse mortgage, getting the value of, the nature of an income stream back from real property. If we allowed that under the FEMA regulations and the SBA regulations, there would be virtually no obstacle to someone who has equity in one of these homes getting approval for one of the SBA loans.

Yet this was never a part of the SBA regulation. I have urged Administrator Engeleiter to make it so and have promised to introduce any legislation that is necessary to make it so.

In conclusion, the items I have identified here are the specifics with which I became familiar 1 year ago and over the last year, specifics that should be anticipated as to how FEMA, SBA, can better do their jobs. I am not suggesting in any of these that the United States is making a bad investment or, in many of these, that we made any additional investment of dollars at all, but rather we take the dollars and use them more compassionately and more wisely, recognizing the kind of need these people are in.

I conclude with one last remark: The events of a year ago will never be forgotten. I remember walking through my own home on the Stanford University campus, observing what had been broken and what had been lost. It was the most serious event one could happen, short of damage to one's family, to see one's home in the condition that I saw my home.

There are still cracks in our walls. Hopefully, and we are assured, not of any threat to life or safety.

But that one moment changed the lives of so many Californians and so many Americans because the truth came home. It became true, it could happen to me, it did happen to me.

So my wife and I went around and attached fishing line to our vases and then put the fishing line into nails in the wall, so that the next time the vases would not fall. We took our water heater and bolted it in, all steps that we could well have taken in advance.

To my shame, I will tell you I discovered for the first time where the gas cutoff was.

To those listening to these remarks or who are reading our remarks in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that you do not wait for it to happen; that you take those preventive measures now. A few simple steps that can save so much in property and in life in the event that this disaster befalls you as well: Putting aside some water, putting a radio up, a flashlight, these things should be done in advance.

So many times you hear it, but let me say simply that I thought it would not hit me in my home on the Stanford campus, but it did. If all of us took those steps, then perhaps the next time we would suffer far less in damage and loss of life.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank my friend from California.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for us to note that there actually was a greatly improved response by virtually all Federal agencies in response to the Loma Prieta quake when you juxtaposed that to the situation that I faced in October 1987. I recall working closely with my friend and other members of the bay area delegation in trying to expedite the response when the October 1987, 3 years ago this month, quake hit, the Whittier Narrows quake hit our area. One of the things that was most frustrating for the officials in Whittier, CA, was in getting an immediate response. One of the things that happened was, in doing the damage assessment there was a delay. Some here on the east coast talked about waiting for the aftershock before any kind of damage assessment would be done. We know that often the aftershock—and there have been 7,000 aftershocks in the bay area following the Loma Prieta quake—that in the aftershock there comes an issue. After the big quake there is a greater degree of concern and psychological damage to those victims that often comes from the initial quake itself.

So, Mr. Speaker, we were able, in response to the problems that we had at the Whittier Narrows quake in 1987, to get an expeditious response to the Loma Prieta earthquake.

Also, I think it is important for us to note that in the Whittier Narrows quake it was tough for us to get the Federal Emergency Management Agency, FEMA, to get the DAC's, disaster application centers, on line. There was a delay period which created a great deal of unhappiness on the part of those victims of that quake, and I am happy to report that, when we worked in that 3-year period between the Whittier Narrows quake and the Loma Prieta quake, we were able, as I remember my friend reported to me, to get a speedy response, and we got the DACs, the disaster application centers, on the line in the gentleman's district and in other parts of the bay area.

So, I think it is important for us to recognize that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I appreciate his remarks very much.

In this particular instance, bear in mind that FEMA was coming right off the Hugo Hurricane on the South Carolina coast, and, given that, I thought it was remarkable what job they were able to accomplish. The placements of DAC's, the disaster assistance centers to which my colleague refers, was virtually immediate, and it was from learning, from the experience in the Whittier Narrows earthquake, that the response was so soon. The items I identified in both FEMA and SBA were structural in statute or regulation. They had to do with the laws, not the willingness, ability or ability of people who implement those laws.

One other point occurs on this, and it is a fascinating concern. In advance one would not have thought of it. But what does one do when there is damage to an area which is not covered by our statutes? Well, one might ask what would those possibly be. Well, I am privileged to live on the Stanford University campus, and it has one of the most beautiful churches, the Stanford Memorial Church. It is considered by the Federal officials administering FEMA and SBA a violation of the first amendment for Federal assistance to be given to rebuild the Stanford Memorial Church, and no man, I think, or woman has greater respect for the first amendment in this Chamber than I.

But anticipating this, if we had an insurance fund available, to which my colleague from southern California has so contributed, then those institutions that fall out of the regulatory scheme, such as a religious institution because of first amendment concern, would nevertheless be available to take self-insurance to insurance under one of these programs, and so we would have government assisting without running a file of any establishment of religion. That is another example of a structural improvement, not a criticism of those who administer the laws.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL] for his contribution, and I think that he has laid the groundwork for use to recognize that this plan, which the gentleman from Washington State [Mr. SWIFT], my colleague, and I have introduced, H.R. 4480, which is designed to have a joint government industry insuring operation to deal with this, is, I believe, a very important thing for us to recognize here this evening.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a second longer?

Mr. DREIER of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to applaud the gentleman's leadership in proposing that because it addresses one of the most difficult problems of the next quake, which is a massive quake, taking out the reserves of all commercial insurance companies. The problem of a single quake in a single area where you have not laid off the risk of a sufficient number of companies causes a potential shortfall. That shortfall can be accommodated by the coinsurance and secondary insurance pool that is such an integral part of my colleague's bill, and I would also applaud his willingness. I know from discussion, but it is not yet in your bill to consider a possible way of embracing more than simply earthquakes, that, if the average American were informed that his or her home is subject to a disaster, she or he would be willing to contribute to a fund anticipating such disaster. The disaster may be a tornado in one place, a hurricane in another or an earthquake in a third.

Mr. DREIER of California. As my friend knows, Mr. Speaker, I thank him for his contribution. As my friend knows, we already have a program similar to that dealing with floods. The flood insurance program is one example, and it is quite possible that we could broaden this. What I tried to point to is, as I said to the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN], 39 States in this country are faced with the prospect of being affected by a major quake, and we cannot forget that. There are some who argue that because of the fact that I have introduced this legislation calling for a joint government-industry insuring fund that I am now taking a step in the direction of government encroachment in an area which I, as one whose philosophy is compatible with my friend from Stanford University, am not inclined to support.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER of California. Happy to yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state for the record that I know of no Member less tolerant of unnecessary intrusion of government into private life and private industry than my colleague from southern California.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for mentioning that, but let me explain why I believe this legislation actually moves away from that and the gentleman's outline of the proposed changes that he would like to see take place in the laws that relate to the Small Business Administration, the Federal Emergency Management Agency and other Government entities is important because today any disaster that hits in this country, the American looks to one source——

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. That is right.

Mr. DREIER of California [continuing]. For the solution, and that is the Federal Government, and virtually in every part of the country the goal is to get designation by the President of the United States that it is a Federal disaster area.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague would yield, one can approach this in a very appropriate philosophical way, and my colleague's background in Claremont is well known on the topic of appropriate levels and use of government. The function of government is to do that which the individual cannot do or to do better than which the individual could do as well, and here we have a very clear example of the use of government where it cannot be done by an individual. That is to say, where the risk is so great that a single individual, or a single company, or even a whole family of companies, would be bankrupted. If ever there were a model for the appropriate involvement of governmental action, it is in response to a national disaster.

So, I do not think that the excellent proposal of my colleague from southern California should be challenged in the slightest as involving government inappropriately. It is perhaps one of those few areas where moderate, conservative, libertarian and every other stripe within the political spectrum would agree that government has an appropriate role.

Mr. DREIER of California. I think, as my friend recognizes, there is one entity the people look to, and that is the Federal Government, and the goal with this legislation of having this coinsuring arm is to shift away from simply having the Government involved, but to instead encourage the private insuring industry to move into this area and simply have, as premiums are being built up in the fund, the Federal Government as a backdrop, and ultimately we hope, when this quake does hit, the Federal Government may not have to be involved at all.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my friend from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is anxiously looking forward to delivering his special order, and I have some information which I would like to incorporate in the RECORD including the Wall Street Journal article which appeared a few weeks ago talking about the prospect of an earthquake hitting on the New Madrid Fault on December 3, and also I would like to provide an outline of the legislation, H.R. 4480, which I have, in the RECORD at this point.

LOMA PRIETA—ONE YEAR LATER

1. 63 persons killed and 3,757 injured.

2. Only one-third of the 85,000 applicants for quake loans or grants from FEMA and two-thirds of 25,000 people seeking SBA loans received money.

3. The California Office of Emergency Services estimated $5.9 billion in damage from the quake.

4. 23,408 houses and 3,530 businesses were damaged, and 1,018 homes and 366 businesses were completely destroyed.

5. FEMA estimates that $1.3 billion in federal funds has been committed and that volunteer agencies have spent another $61.5 million ($54.3 million from the Red Cross).

6. In the past year, more than 7,000 aftershocks, ranging up to 5.4 on the Richter scale, have been recorded on the northern segment of the San Andreas fault.

WHITTIER-NARROWS—THREE YEARS LATER

1. There were 14,537 SBA Disaster Assistance Applications following the earthquake. 13,137 were considered by the SBA. Of those, 8,526 (or 65.3 percent) were approved for a total of $155.9 million in loans. Thus far, seven applications are still pending.

2. According to Whittier City Manager Tom Mauk, there is a sense of recovery, at least to some degree. People are wondering why the recovery has not been completed. He said the City is at about 85% of it's original state before the quake.

3. He said the biggest horror story was the time it took FEMA to respond to the initial quake and to set up the Disaster Application Centers.

4. According to FEMA, federal costs for public assistance and the Individual and Family Grant Program were estimated at $22.3 million. 99 projects received assistance.

5. According to FEMA, 9,000 families received $9.6 million in individual and family grants. Housing assistance was provided to 14,231 families.

6. Damage to homes and businesses totaled $78 million in Whittier, $368 million throughout L.A. and Orange counties.

7. Overall, three people died and hundreds were injured.

8. 50 percent of the damaged buildings in Whittier are still under reconstruction.

9. About 2% of the homeowners in Whittier had quake insurance.

SCENARIO OF CATASTROPHIC EARTHQUAKES

NEW MADRID (8+ MAGNITUDE)

Deaths & Injuries: Only taking into account the immediate physical effects, the number of deaths is expected to be about 6,300 and the number of injured requiring hospitalization about 24,000.

Building Damage: $60 billion for replacement and restoration costs, and another $60 billion from fire follow-on and other after effects.

Electricity Distribution: Expect damage to about 80 percent of electric power lines in the region, and about 40 percent of power generating stations, affecting about 85 percent of uses in the region.

Natural Gas: The quake will cause the disruption of supplies to about 60 percent of the users in Chicago, Philadelphia, New York, Louisville, Cincinnati, Detroit, Buffalo, and Boston. About 50 percent of the population centers of the north and east will be without gas for about 4 months.

Oil: Because of pipeline disruptions, prices for gasoline and heating oil will rise about 15 percent.

Transportation: 85 percent of all bridges across the Mississippi in the region will be destroyed or severely demaged. Traffic on the Mississippi River will be halted for 4 weeks because of shifts in the river flow.

Nuclear Power Plants: One located 150 miles west of St. Louis will suffer undetermined structural damage.

Flooding: Two large reservoirs on the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers could likely rupture.

Homelessness: Nearly 500,000 in the initial weeks.

Economic Factors: Regional banks will undergo a severe liquidity crisis as wire transfer and communications lines are severed. To pay off insurance claims, industry will have to sell-off $60 billion in assets which would disrupt bond and equity markets.

LOS ANGELES (8+ MAGNITUDE)

Geologists estimate that there is a 50 percent chance of an earthquake of at least 8.3 magnitude striking Los Angeles in the next 30 years.

Death & Injury: depending on the time of day, between 3,000 and 14,000 killed and 12,000-55,000 injured.

Property Loss: Initial damage would total $20 billion.

Roads & Highways: The area has 1,645 miles of highways and freeways. Collapsed bridges and roads would cut many communities off and hamper emergency vehicles.

Utilities: Two of the three major water sources would like rupture. Electric power would be lost for several days.

Petroleum Facilities: With more than a dozen refining facilities and hundreds of pipelines, massive oil spills and major fires would spread, particularly around Long Beach.

Economic Losses: California Department of Insurance estimates economic loss will exceed $50 billion.

OTHER EARTHQUAKES

San Francisco (8.3): 3,500 to 12,840 deaths; 13,300 to 49,700 injuries, and property damage of $40.2 billion (1987 dollars).

Charleston, S.C.: According to FEMA, a repeat of the 8.6 magnitude earthquake of 1886 would cause 5,000 deaths and $2.6 billion in damages.

Boston: According to FEMA, a repeat of the 1755 Cape Ann earthquake could result in hundreds of deaths and $5 billion in damage.

Salt Lake City (7.5): According to the USGS, estimated losses to all buildings would be about $6.5 billion. About 75 percent of the losses would be to housing units because of the large number of older unreinforced brick housing units in central Utah.

PREDICTIONS ABOUT NEW MADRID

1. New Mexico climatologist Iben Browning predicts a 50-50 chance of an earthquake along the New Madrid Fault on Dec. 3 or 4.

2. Scientists agree that there is a 50 percent chance of a damaging earthquake in the New Madrid zone in the next 10 years, and a 90 percent chance in 50 years.

WHERE EARTHQUAKES HAVE OCCURRED

1. 6.5 magnitude in Seattle in 1965.

2. 7.0 magnitude in Olympia, Washington, in 1949.

3. Charleston, S.C. in 1886.

4. Cape Ann, Massachusetts, in 1755.

5. St. Lawrence River region in 1925.

6. Salt Lake City around the time of European settlement.

7. Alaska (many times), the worst coming in 1964.

8. Only portions of three states (Florida, Mississippi, and Texas) are totally immune to earthquake risks.

9. Three 8.5 magnitude in New Madrid in 1811 and 1812. The quake was so strong that it was felt in Canada, west to Nebraska, south to the Gulf of Mexico, and east to the Atlantic Ocean. It was estimated to have affected 50,000 square miles.

OUTLINE OF H.R. 4480

1. All homeowner's insurance policies would include earthquake protection. Premiums would be low in Texas and Florida (about $2 per $100,000), and higher in CA and Tenn. ($20 to $40). Premiums will be lower for homes meeting earthquake standards.

2. Establishes two government-industry funds—using private funds but backed by the govertnment (similar to FHA).

Premiums for "shake damage" will go into one fund run by a tax-exempt government corporation (This is known as the "Primary Residential Property Insurance Program.")

A second and larger fund, known as the "Excess Reinsurance Program," would be financed by assessments on insurance companies to cover the cost of fire, liability, worker's compensation and business interruption. This fund would not be tapped unless losses exceed $10 billion.

3. The Corporation will be a partnership between representatives of private insurance and federal and state governments.

ADVANTAGES OF FEDERAL EARTHQUAKE INSURANCE PROGRAM

1. Lowers property insurance premiums in California.

2. Reduces disaster costs to the Federal Government, such as direct aid, tax losses, and losses from insurance programs.

3. Improves incentives for people to reduce earthquake damage.

4. It's a case of "you can pay me now or pay me later." A national insurance program may be the most cost-effective.

5. Frees up state and local money for infrastructure repairs.

6. Does not rely on direct taxpayer funds.

7. Addresses a national, not regional, problem. 39 States are vulnerable to major or moderate quakes.

8. Insurance is more equitable. The disaster package approved last year cost every working American an average of $32, regardless of where they live. In contrast, earthquake insurance will be based on risk—$2 per year per $100,000 of coverage in Florida, vs $30-$40 in California.

9. Makes earthquake insurance universally available. In California, less than 20 percent currently have earthquake insurance. Nationwide, the figure is about 3 percent.

10. Where most earthquake insurance is sold ($ in premiums):

	Millions
California	$314.5
Kentucky	2.6
Missouri	5.5
S. Carolina	2.5
Tennessee	3.5
New York	2.3
Washington	3.3
Ohio	2.8

Mr. Browning says it's not easy being on record with predictions that few other scientists will support. "I feel like a lonely little petunia in a cabbage patch," he says. But asked if he enjoys being right, he says, "It's the only damn thing that matters. If one is a business consultant, they don't pay you for being wrong."

Plenty of other business people are cashing in on his prediction. Insurance salespeople are peddling earthquake coverage to homeowners and businesses. Salespeople from a Memphis company pop up at survival seminars with a device (for $259 and up) that turns off gas lines when a quake hits. And entrepreneurs are marketing two kinds of earthquake T-shirts in Memphis. One says, "I'm staying," the other, "I'm leaving."

All of this has changed life in places like Blytheville, Ark. (pop: 24,314), tucked amid vast flat farmland, right at the corner of the Arkansas, Tennessee and Missouri borders.

So many people plan to skip town on Dec. 3 that the Flexible Technologies tubing plant already plans to shut down for two days, at a cost of thousands of dollars. Says Jimmy Connell, plant superintendent, "It's going to be a ghost town around here."

Robert Edwards, a Blytheville fireman who teaches seminars in earthquake survival, has become a hot property. For five years, most of his classes were lightly attended. Now his phone-answering machine says he is almost completely booked through October.

For one recent class, he was in Osceola, Ark. It is 9 a.m. on a rainy Saturday, and 325 Osceolans, gripping legal pads and spiral notebooks, fill the high school auditorium for an all-day session on earthquake preparedness. With his booming voice, Mr. Edwards lays out a grim scenario: "One hundred and fifty thousand dead in Memphis instantly-instantly. And all the federal emergency help is going to go there and St. Louis. You have to be prepared to take complete care of yourself for 24 hours to two weeks. You may be five to six months without power."

After the seminar, two elderly sisters, both widows, split on what to do. Fearing their home will be looted, Bess Mann, 86 years old, wants to ride it out. But her sister, Hallie Peterson, 83, wants to stay with their nephew in Mississippi. Scared that the big Memphis-Arkansas bridge that spans the Mississippi River will collapse in a quake, she's charting an alternate route two hours out of her way.

School districts in Earle and Wilson, Ark., have announced closings around Dec. 3. Some schools practice earthquake drills, while others sponsor cake sales to buy survival kits for classrooms, with items like blankets; flashlights and radios.

Michael Prince, a child psychologist in Jonesboro, says he knows of 10 to 15 children, age four to nine, so unnerved that they've reverted to bed-wetting or extreme anxiety about being separated from their parents.

Trying to calm the fear, the National Earthquake Prediction Evaluation Council, a panel of academic and government seismic experts, will review the Browning claim at a meeting in a few weeks. In 11 years of studying prediction methods, the panel has found no bona fide approach. The group usually ignores claims that aren't scientifically documented (like the one by the California man who said his goldfish helped him predict quakes).

"But this one," says Randall Updike, the executive secretary, "has created such chaos in the mild-continent region that we felt we had to give our advice."

Mr. Browning says he is tentatively booked to give a talk in Minneapolis on Dec. 3 and he doesn't plan to go there via St. Louis. But he adds: "I highly recommend against panic. That will kill more people than earthquakes."

Mr. Speaker, out of respect to the distinguished minority whip, I yield back the balance of my time so that he may proceed.

WILL THE EARTH MOVE ON DEC. 3? MIDWEST RATTLED BY PREDICTION—A SCIENTIST EXPECTS A QUAKE; SOME MAY PLAN TO FLEE, AND ENTREPRENEURS PROFIT

By (MICHAEL J. MCCARTHY)

MEMPHIS, TENN.—Friday nights used to be slow at The Fault Line, a nightclub here on busy Poplar Avenue. But after word spread that a major earthquake was forecast for Dec. 3 in the Midwest, The Fault Line began throwing earthquake parties.

On Friday nights now, hundreds of patrons pour into the club to swig "Earthquake shooters" and sign up to win Dec. 3 Earthquake Escape Packages to the Bahamas or Hot Springs, Ark.

But even as Memphis whoops it up, the prediction that the Big One may come in December is triggering tremors up and down the Mississippi Valley. Shaken, thousands of people are crowding into earthquake survival classes. In Arnold, Mo., 3,000 people showed up for one course.

In Missouri and Arkansas, some schools and businesses have announced plans to close in early December. Entrepreneurs are hawking quake insurance, survival kits and gas-line safety gadgets.

Some people are planning to flee. "You can't run from everything," say Tammy McCormick, a nurse in Blytheville, Ark., who will take her two youngsters and spend several days with relatives in North Carolina. "But it seems stupid to stay on a fault line with a prediction like this."

Everybody talks about the San Andreas fault in California. But the Midwest actually has had three of the most powerful earthquakes on this continent. In 1811 and 1812, along a 120-mile zig-zag formation called the New Madrid fault, a series of quakes ravaged the Midwest. Researchers estimate those earthquakes ranked stronger than 8 on the Richter Scale, which hadn't been invented yet. They were more than 10 times greater than the 7.1 quake that rocked California's Bay Area last October.

Church bells rang as far away as Boston. Chimneys crumbled in Cincinnati. And as tons of soil and rock bed pitched and rolled in a seismic frenzy, new waterfalls spiked up, causing part of the mighty Mississippi River to flow backward for several hours.

The New Madrid (pronounced MAD-rid) fault still has 150 small, mostly unfelt, earthquakes a year. In the next 10 years, experts warn, the area has a 33% chance of a quake measuring 7.1. That could produce billions of dollars in damage and thousands of casualties. "We're overdue for one in the 6s and low 7s," says David Stewart, an earthquake expert at Southeast Missouri State University.

Over the years, a few pinpoint-on-the map towns have tried to capitalize on the little-known fault. New Madrid, Mo., the fault's namesake, draws tourists to a museum with exhibits on the 19th century devastation. And Paragould, Ark., has held earthquake festivals with events like the "Miss Faultless" beauty contest.

But as Monday, Dec. 3, approaches, the whole matter is becoming more serious. That's because the predictor has gained credibility in some important circles for his work on the climate.

Iben Browning, a 72-year-old scientist, predicted October's Bay Area quake a week before it happened, say people who heard him speak to the Equipment Manufacturers Institute. And he predicted "geological danger" on Sept. 19, 1985, along a band of latitude that included Mexico City—where a massive quake struck on that day.

Mr. Browning, who has a Ph.D. in physiology, genetics and bacteriology, writes a climate newsletter out of New Mexico. He has clients, such as PaineWebber Inc., who have long paid for his wisdom on how the weather will affect their agricultural investments.

Since 1971, Mr. Browning says, he has picked the correct dates of four large earthquakes, two volcanoes—and one day with both a volcano and an earthquake.

He bases his forecasts on tidal forces caused by the positions of the sun and the moon—an old theory, critics say, that doesn't wash. On Dec. 3, those forces are expected to be at a 27-year high. Mr. Browning says that will exert pressure that could trigger faults already ripe to fall.

The New Madrid area has a 50-50 chance of producing at least a 7 quake on Dec. 3, give or take a day or two on either side, Mr. Browning says. At that time, a similar quake has a lesser change of occurring on California's San Andreas or Hayward faults, according to Mr. Browning, and an 8.2 quake in Tokyo has a greater chance.

Skepticism abounds. "No responsible scientist can predict an exact day for an earthquake," says Brian Mitchell, a quake expert at St. Louis University, echoing the majority opinion.

But Mr. Browning shouldn't be written off so quickly, says Southeast Missouri State's Mr. Stewart, who recently spent four days with Mr. Browning. "He has a methodology that can determine, plus or minus a window of a day or two, an enhanced probability of a volcano or an earthquake in certain latitudes," says Mr. Stewart. "No one else has been able to replicate it, but that doesn't mean it's wrong."

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be 1 year since the devastating Loma Prieta earthquake struck northern California. Indeed, 5:04 p.m., the exact time at which the earth shook, has been seared into the memories of those who experienced the temblor, a time of tragedy, a time of great courage, a time that will never be forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, I will never forget seeing the images of the fallen section of the bay bridge, of the building in the marina on fire, of the cataclysmic failure of the Cypress section of the freeway. I will never forget walking in the marina district of San Francisco, or visiting the shelters where hundreds of San Franciscans slept. And I will never forget the spirit, the sense of all San Franciscans even in the immediate aftermath of the quake which said: Let us start the rebuilding process.

I want to thank all my colleagues in the House, both personally and on behalf of my constituents, for helping my district start the rebuilding process. Your swift action, your ready compassion and generosity provided the raw materials for San Francisco to began healing, to begin rebuilding. Scant days after the earthquake, San Franciscans received Federal checks to pay for alternative housing. The city received swift approvals from Federal agencies to clear the debris and to begin emergency repairs on destroyed gas, water, and electrical lines. Nevertheless, I remain concerned that many of our Federal agencies, charged with carrying out the intent of Congress, are falling short in fulfilling the promises we made to the victims of the earthquake.

Though 1 year has passed, the rebuilding process in San Francisco continues. Large sections of the important arterial freeways to San Francisco remain closed, awaiting final approvals for repair and, in some instances, reconstruction. San Francisco International Airport sustained over $20 million in damages, and to date has not received any reimbursement from either the Federal Aviation Administration or FEMA. For a city which relies so much on tourism, and has been ranked by the the tourist industry as the most desirable city in the United States to visit, these barriers to access to San Francisco remain formidable and continue to have an adverse impact on many businesses in San Francisco.

Many educational and cultural landmarks in San Francisco show visible signs of damage wrought on their structures last October 17. The San Francisco Unified School District requires $21 million to repair its schools, and the U.S. Department of Education continues to bicker over the scope of work. The Geary Theater, Home of the nationally acclaimed American Conservatory Theater and a national historic landmark, continues to sit, empty and with a gaping hole in its ceiling, because of disputes over the need for seismic reconstruction.

But first among the shortfalls of our Federal agencies, many homeowners found that they fell through the safety nets offered by FEMA and the Small Business Administration. Many families found that they could not qualify for a Small Business Administration loan, and then found out that the scope of repairs authorized by FEMA grants fell well below that actually required to make their homes habitable and safe. Others, particularly seniors, found that their fixed incomes prevented them from qualifying for a loan, or found that the application process—which included documents 57 pages long—were too cumbersome and emotionally exhausting for them to complete. Finally, and most sharply felt in San Francisco, the loan amounts offered to homeowners for repairs in an area where house values are extremely high barely scratched the surface of moneys actually needed to complete repairs on homes. I believe one of the first priorities of the new Congress is to review the FEMA/SBA homeowner process to make it more responsive to the realities of modern homeowners.

The reason for my concern is evident once you review the figures. San Francisco suffered over $2.7 billion in damages, nearly half the total loss experienced by the State of California as a result of the Loma Prieta earthquake. Over 382 homes were damaged, 11 homes destroyed, and over 500 units of low-cost housing were lost in the city, 134 businesses suffered direct damage from the earthquake, not including the many businesses that were forced to close because of lost business. And to jangle our nerves even further, the bay area has experienced over 7,000 aftershocks, as recently as this week, from the Loma Prieta epicenter.

But while this may seem like a litany of complaints, let me stress one immutable fact: San Francisco is back. The marina remains one of the most attractive districts in the city to live in, and demand for rentals and homes has returned to near prequake levels. Many neighborhood associations, some formed immediately after the earthquake to deal with the emergency, are celebrating the 1 year anniversary tomorrow with block parties and barbecues. And, tomorrow, at 5:04 p.m., San Francisco will hold a flag-raising ceremony atop the historic Ferry Building. It will be the first time a flag has flown over the ferry building since the earthquake snapped the original flagpole in two. Led by the San Francisco symphony and the San Francisco opera, all in attendance will sing a rousing chorus of the "San Francisco" to remind us all that through the turmoil, trouble, and tragedy, there remains the spirit of the "city that knows how" that will withstand the test of time and nature and continue to make San Francisco one of the greatest cities in the world.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to commemorate this day in history.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, let me add my voice to my colleagues voices in commemorating the San Francisco Earthquake.

On this first anniversary I wish to commend the spirit, the caring and fighting spirit of San Francisco and the surrounding counties; the spirit of Santa Cruz and the surrounding counties; the spirit of all California and indeed the entire country which helped in so many ways. The American people are a great people and our greatness shows in a crisis. We pulled together and we made it back.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 1-year anniversary of the October 17 Loma Prieta Earthquake.

On October 17, 1989, lives of Americans in California were changed forever by the forces of nature.

The Loma Prieta earthquake struck northern California including the 13th Congressional District which I represent.

Most Californians will never forget where they were on October 17, 1989: I was attending a dinner for the President of South Korea here in Washington when I received the call telling me that a major earthquake had struck the bay area.

I immediately got on the phone with Secretary of Transportation Sam Skinner, who was leaving for the bay area that night. I joined Secretary Skinner, Mrs. Quayle and Representative DON EDWARDS. We were to be some of the first on the scene.

We didn't know what to expect once we touched down. We didn't know at first where we could touch down. That's how unknown the extent of the damage was. However, once on the ground, we could see the devastation.

The sights I witnessed after that fateful quake will stay with me forever. The entire San Francisco Bay area is still feeling the impact and will continue to feel it for many months and years.

I was shocked and saddened by the devastation of this natural disaster, but I was proud of the response by the citizens of Santa Clara County and the entire bay area. Everyone pulled together like the close communities we are. That's how we survived until the Federal aid came, and how we were able to rebuild our lives.

And, after the earthquake, the Congress moved quickly as well. I am very grateful to my colleagues on both bodies for their assistance and compassion.

We were able to develop an emergency $3.45 billion legislative package which included $1 billion for emergency transportation assistance programs.

This legislation was passed by the House and Senate and signed into law within 10 days—the fastest action for emergency aid of this magnitude since the Second World War.

I was very disappointed, however, that some Federal agencies didn't respond as quickly as they should have.

I have been reviewing the performance of the Federal Emergency Management Agency during and after the disaster. Bay area residents reported confusion with bureaucratic red tape, constantly busy telephones, misinformation, and computer glitches, which made it tougher for people to get the assistance they needed.

The Public Works Subcommittee on Investigation and Oversight held hearings on the earthquake response to explore, among other things, the competence of the FEMA field office personnel and inspectors, the absense of uniform deadlines for temporary housing assistance, and reports of possible insensitivity by the Agency toward individuals with special needs.

I have continued to review the FEMA operations and look forward to a dialogue with the Agency on their response to natural disasters. It is essential that FEMA be accountable for its response network and must improve the Agency in the event of future disasters and reduce the human cost of such tragedies.

I have been equally disappointed by the response from the Small Business Administration [SBA]. I was contacted by people in my home district of Santa Clara County who had problems qualifying for loans from the SBA.

To help these individuals, I introduced the Disaster Loan Equity Act of 1990 which is designed to assist county residents and others by amending some of the harsher eligibility requirements adopted during the Reagan administration.

Along other lines, the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology has been working to improve the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program. This program helped ensure that the Loma Prieta earthquake was not the tragedy on the magnitude of the Armenian and Mexican earthquakes. By learning more about the nature of earthquakes, we can continue to reduce their potential for devastating our homes, our businesses, and our lives.

In the end, we learned how lucky the region was. Less than 100 lives were lost—where a similar magnitude earthquake in Armenia had claimed 25,000 lives a year earlier.

The Loma Prieta earthquake proved that preparedness pays off—and it also proved how lucky we are to have been in the United States, where the dedication of the Congress, the President and Americans throughout the country made it easier for life in the bay area to return to normal as quickly as possible.

BUDGET DECISION PUT INTO CONTEXT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WISE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take the full time, but I do want to take some time this evening to talk about the series of budget votes we had today because I think that the American people deserve to have these decisions put into context.

For 5 months we have been struggling to try to find a budget solution. I think President Bush in his speech to the joint session of Congress in late September put it very clearly. He said, and I quote: "For America to lead, America must remain strong and vital." Our world leadership and domestic strength are mutual in reinforcing a woven piece as strongly bound as Old Glory. To revitalize our leadership capacity we must address our budget deficit, not after election day, not next year, but now. Higher oil prices slow our growth, and higher defense costs would only make our fiscal deficit problem worse.

That deficit was already greater than it should have been, a projected $232 billion for the coming year. It must and will be reduced.

To my friends in Congress, together we must act this very month, before the next fiscal year begins October 1, to get America's economic house in order. The gulf situation helps us realize we are more economically vulnerable than we ever should be. Americans must never again enter any crisis, economic or military, with an excessive dependence on foreign oil and an excessive burden of Federal debt. Most Americans are sick and tired of endless battles in the Congress and between the branches over budget matters. It is high time we pulled together and got the job done right. It is up to us to straighten this out.

This job has four basic parts. First, the Congress should this month, within a budget agreement, enact growth-oriented tax measures to help avoid recession in the short term, and to increase savings, investment, productivity and competitiveness for the longer term. These measures include extending incentives for research and experimentation, expanding the use of IRA's for new homeowners, establishing tax-deferred family savings accounts, creating incentives for the creation of enterprise zones, and initiatives to encourage more domestic drilling, and, yes, reducing the tax rate for capital gains.

Notice that the emphasis here is on avoiding a recession. The very first thing the President focused on in his speech to the joint session in early September was that Congress should enact a budget agreement with growth-oriented tax measures.

The average citizen might say, why is a growth-oriented approach the keynote of what the President was trying to do? For a very simple reason. The President recognized that we are on the verge of a recession. In fact, some 60 percent of the American people say we are in a recession.

The President understood that if we go into a recession, if millions of Americans lose their jobs, if they are laid off, they will not be able to pay taxes, because they will not be working, and they will in fact be drawing unemployment or welfare, and the deficit will get bigger. So people who are worried about the deficit have a real reason to worry about stopping the recession.

In fact, the key to our budgetary effort was to create a sound economy to create jobs.

President Bush spoke in early September. Over the last month the economy has grown weaker. Oil prices are too high, and we are in grave danger of having a recession.

We wanted on the Republican side to find a way to adopt a budget which would avoid or minimize a recession. We believe that the lesson in the 1980's, the longest period of economic growth in peacetime American history, are the lessons of cutting taxes, increasing incentives, encouraging entrepreneurs, establishing new small businesses, encouraging investment, and getting more people to work.

The 1980's were better for working middle-class Americans and for retirees than the 1970's. Remember the 1970's? Thirteen percent inflation, 22 percent interest rates, and ultimately, in a recession which was the hangover of the 1970's, 10 percent unemployment, the worst since the Great Depression.

Now the Democrats are rushing us back to the 1970's. Higher taxes, taxes which will crush small business, crush entrepreneurship, and crush savings and investment. Raising taxes causes people to send the money to Washington. They cannot save it because it is not there. They do not take it home. Raising taxes so people cannot invest in new jobs and new businesses.

We know how to create jobs. Republicans were successful throughout the 1980's in creating new jobs in, as I said earlier, the longest period of peacetime job expansion in American history.

We know that higher taxes will kill jobs, and yet the Democrats have created a prorecession budget, a job-killing budget, that will in the long run increase the deficit, because as it crushes the economy with higher taxes, as people are laid off from work, they will cease to pay taxes as they lose their jobs, and in fact the gap will widen and we will have a bigger deficit.

We Republicans, on the other hand, believe that a series of tax incentives could create jobs. As the President said, we believe that enterprise zones for the inner cities could create jobs.

In fact, the Civil Rights Commission came out today in a unanimous 6-to-0 vote and called for the creation of enterprise zones in America's inner cities with zero capital gains to be paid on them to encourage tremendous amounts of new investment so we can create jobs in the inner city on the belief that the most important social welfare program is a job, that helping people have a job in their neighborhood so they can go to work does more for human dignity, to help the poor become the nonpoor, than any other step.

In addition, we Republicans believe that every American should have an individual retirement account, and that individual retirement account should not only allow them to save for their retirement, but they should be able to take it out and use it to buy their first home or to loan it to their children and grandchildren so they can buy their first home.

Furthermore, we believe, as the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON] has recommended in a bill she introduced, businesses should be able to expense their first $250,000 in investment in new equipment, in new technology, so that we can encourage American business, particularly small and medium-sized business, to compete in the world market with the best machinery and the best technology, so our workers can have the best jobs with the best take-home pay.

Finally, we believe that a capital gains tax cut to 15 percent with 1-year holding is good for America. That would not be as good a capital gains rate as Japan or Germany has. They both are more favorable to investment. The Japanese and Germans work harder to get people to build factories, to buy new machinery. But it would be a big step in the right direction.

This package of incentives, it is estimated by economists, would create somewhere between 800,000 and 1.5 million new jobs. Just think of that. At a time that Americans are worried about a recession, at a time that Americans are worried about the economy getting weaker, if we could add 800,000 new jobs, if those new jobs were $20,000 or $30,000 a year jobs on the average, and they added $16 to $24 billion in new income to the American economy, and if that new income went out and bought other goods and services, what a tremendous step to avoiding a recession.

Yet, it became clear over the last week that the Democrats would not accept a job-creating, recession-avoiding, incentive program. The Democrats were so committed to class warfare and to envy that they would rather kill the process of creating new jobs. In effect, the spirit of Ligachev in the old times, raise taxes, create a big centralized bureaucracy. Do not worry about creating jobs in the private sector. That mindset was still there in the Democratic Party.

But we Republicans felt we had an obligation to work to bring spending under control, to work on reducing the deficit. With the approval of our leaders, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], the policy committee chairman appointed a task force headed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Some 15 Members worked hard putting together a budget with no new taxes. With the help of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], the ranking Republican on the Committee on the Budget, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER], the vice chairman on the Committee on Ways and Means, we put together what we thought was a very effective budget alternative.

Republicans were prepared to freeze spending in Washington, to stop the discretionary spending of the Appropriations Committees from going up, to keep them at last year's number, to take those savings and by controlling spending in Washington, to avoid new taxes on the American people.

We produced a $410 billion deficit reduction package. Not the full $500 billion that some people wanted, but consider this: if you went to the average American and said we can get you $350 billion, like the Republicans did, $60 billion less, and we will get to $500 by raising taxes $150 billion, or we can get you $410 billion by controlling spending, but you won't have new taxes, 85 percent of the American people would have preferred to get to a spending cut budget with no new taxes. The overwhelming majority of the American people favor controlling spending in Washington, rather than raising taxes back home.

When I go to Jonesboro, or Newnan, or Douglasville, or Carrollton, GA, it is clear as I talk to people that they want spending controlled in Washington. They do not want family spending controlled back home in Georgia by raising taxes on every American.

□ 0030

So we proposed a spending cut, job growth budget, a budget that we believed would be far better, particularly because of the Democratic tax increases and fee increases. According to the best estimate that we could get from economists, those increases would kill at least 500,000 new jobs. At least 500,000 Americans would find themselves unemployed because of the tax increases. And we know that those 500,000 people would no longer be paying taxes, that they would be drawing unemployment and that they would be ultimately drawing welfare. So they would increase the deficit.

Furthermore, we were very concerned because without some capital gains or other help, it is very clear that property values are going to continue to decline at a time that the Government is the largest single seller of property, and so the cost of the savings and loan program is going to go up dramatically, again increasing the deficit.

Finally, there is an enormous threat to our economy. We are in the first long-term deflation in property values in modern times. None of us have lived through a recession in which the real value of property on a national basis has declined, and that is the core wealth of America, not what is in the stock market or not what is in the commodity market, but what do people own in real property, whether that real property is a home, a business, a factory or physical land. The fact is we now have a national long-term decline in the value of property at the very time when the biggest seller of property in America, because of the savings and loan crisis, is the Federal Government.

So we on the Republican side looked for something like a capital gains tax cut that would increase the value of property, that would save money on the savings and loan bailout by increasing the value of property that the Government was trying to sell.

The choice between cutting spending and raising taxes is very real. And it is ironic, as Democrats talk about being the party of the poor and caring about the poor, that the Civil Rights Commission today voted 6 to nothing, unanimously against new taxes. And they did so for two reasons.

The Civil Rights Commission argued first that in the end if you raise taxes on the poor, they have the least discretionary income, and so whether it is a gasoline tax increase, or it is an increase in excise taxes, or whatever the increase, it ultimately trickles down and hits the poor, and they have the least discretionary money and they can least affort to have new taxes.

But second, the Civil Rights Commission argued that taxes kill jobs, and the people who most need jobs in America are the very poor and, therefore, a tax increase budget by definition becomes an antipoor budget because it kills the very jobs that the poor need if they are to get out of poverty.

We Republicans, taking into account what taxes would do to a recession, taking into account what taxes would do to the Civil Rights Commission analysis of the problem of poverty, decided that we would produce a proposal that focused on controlling spending in Washington, DC. The Republican proposal would in fact have cut $35 billion in 1991 without raising any new taxes, and over 5 years would have cut about $410 billion.

The Republican proposal would have frozen budget authority for the nondefense discretionary spending, that is the political spending done in Washington by the Appropriations Committees. We would have frozen their authority in the first, fourth, and fifth years. That is, we would have said you cannot spend more than you spent last year, something almost every American family is faced with every time there is recession, something which millions of American families are going to face in 1991. It is nothing dramatically different. Families that do not get a pay raise cannot spend more. All we are saying to the politicians on the Appropriations Committees is that they are going to be kept at the same level as those families, and they cannot spend more than they spent last year.

On top of that we found ourselves in the position of saying for years two and three that we would allow the committees to have a 4-percent increase over the previous year's spending. So we have a little bit of increase in two of the years, a tight freeze for three of the years, but no cut in actual dollar terms. They would in fact have gotten as many dollars as the previous year, and there are literally millions of families, certainly hundreds of thousands of families in Georgia, and millions of families in America that have had to make do for 2 years or 3 years in a row on the same amount of money. So we are simply applying to Washington government what happens to millions of American families.

In addition, we were bold. We were willing to freeze the foreign aid budget at last year's number and say if we are going to make the American people tighten their belt, we are also going to tighten the belt on foreign aid. The Republican budget incorporated Senator NUNN's spending proposal in defense, saving $170 billion on defense over 5 years. We had precisely the same entitlement spending reductions as the Democratic budget, exactly the same reductions as the Democrats.

We extended the telephone tax and we had a few small fees that had been recommended by the President.

The first year we raised $4 billion total in old taxes and fees and $23 billion over 5 years, but we had no new taxes. The Republicans had no increase in the income tax. The Republicans had no gasoline tax. And the Republicans had no new excise taxes.

We included very tough enforcement mechanisms in the Republican budget, and we were prepared to impose real spending controls on Washington, DC.

Finally, we had a very important requirement that all future budgets be presented in real terms, not on some kind of inflation base that guarantees every year that spending will go up, but instead literally presenting the budget compared with last year's numbers.

When the Republicans proposed a $410-billion spending cut oriented budget, what were they told? The House Democrats literally refused to make the Republican budget in order. They could not find a way, they said, under the budget process to make the Republican budget in order.

Let me make two points about just how totally phoney the Democratic argument was. First of all, in this Congress the Democrats have waived the budget provisions 62 times. Every time they wanted to spend more money, they waived the budget provision.

Now imagine, with a straight face, a Democratic leader saying that we just cannot figure out how to get that spending cut Republican budget to the floor because our rules will not permit it, and then they came to the floor, and what they did was magnificent, and it certainly was worthy of an Oscar or an Emmy. I guess it would have been an Emmy since we are on television and not in the movies. But it simply did not make snese. The fact is when the Democrats want to increase spending, they waive the budget rules, and as I said, they did it 62 times in the 101st Congress. As long as it was more spending, they found a way to bring it to the floor.

Now we get to the Republican budget cuts. The Republican spending cut budget, they cannot bring it to the floor. But there is a second thing. Any person who watched the House this afternoon, or any person who reads this RECORD will recognize that the Democrats brought to the floor an amendment which their Budget Committee chairman made in order, an amendment which had pages that were not numbered, an amendment which the Chair had to physically count the pages to find out that with 10 minutes' notice we had a 260-page amendment, an amendment which nobody on the Republican side had read, and which we discovered during the debate most of the chairmen on the committees on the Democratic side had not read.

Now if the Democrats could make in order a 260-page amendment without having been read by anyone, why could they not make in order a Republican spending cut budget which was offered?

The reason is simple. We believe that the Democrat leadership knew that if their Members, faced with the choice between a massive tax increase budget and on the other hand having available a spending cut budget, we believe that their leadership knew that it was very, very likely that the spending cut budget would pass, and that in fact the Democrats would not have as much money to spend in Washington to maintain their political allies and their special interests.

What did that mean? It meant that we came to the floor under rules, and it was ironic that this was the first day of the World Series because every American knows from watching sports events that both teams are supposed to play under the same rules, but we came to the floor with two different sets of rules. If you favored a tax increase, you could get your bill to the floor. If you favored a tax increase, you could bring a 260-page amendment that nobody had seen, and then under unanimous consent you could actually stand on the House floor and negotiate with Members and rewrite the amendment right on the floor of the House. And that is what happened, as long as you are in favor of raising taxes.

But if you wanted to cut spending, and you did not have tax increases, then you had to play under very, very different rules. The Republicans fought on behalf of the American people. Mr. MICHEL, the Republican leader, appealed the ruling of the Chair, arguing that it is an inherent right of the minority to have a motion to recommit with instructions, that this goes back to 1909. We were defeated because the Democrats who wanted to raise spending and raise taxes could not afford to give the Republicans a motion to recommit with instructions, because we would have instructed spending cuts, and that would have put the Democrats on the spot.

That would have put the Democrats on the spot. Then we fought the previous question on the rule in order to bring up a rule which would have allowed us to have a spending-cut budget, but we were defeated because the Democrats could not afford to have spending cuts made in order. Then we fought the rule arguing that you should not have a rule that is one-sided; you should not have a rule that allows the taxers and spenders to bring a 260-page amendment to the floor without anyone seeing it, but we were defeated, because the Democrats have control of the House, and the Democrats were determined to have more taxing and more spending.

Then we had the Democratic amendment, a bill which I am going to go into in a little bit of detail, a bill which raised taxes on every American, that is, who works for a living, who files an income tax return. We were defeated. And finally we came to final passage, and the Democratic juggernaut slowed down and barely passed their bill as Member after Member began to realize that they had spent all day voting to raise taxes and voting against spending cuts.

I think it is fascinating, when you go to the American people and you ask the American people what do you want Congress to do, you say you are disgusted with Congress, you say you are tired of what you have been seeing on television, you say you want some changes, what do you want Congress to do. Very straightforward, 83 percent of the American people, more than four out of every five Americans, say cut spending in Washington. Only 12 percent say they want to raise spending and, in fact, of the 83 percent who want to cut spending, 59 percent say they want to strongly cut spending.

What about taxes, you say? Thirty percent say those Republicans who want to cut taxes are right. We ought to cut taxes to avoid a recession, to create jobs. Forty-six percent say, well, the deficit is pretty bad; maybe we should not cut taxes. Let us keep it exactly where it is. Seventy-six percent who favor either cutting taxes or keeping taxes where they are, but, you ask, what about those who want to raise taxes, how many people support the Democrats in raising taxes? Twenty-one percent say they want to raise taxes.

So the side that represented 83 percent, the Republicans who wanted to cut spending, they could not get their budget in order. They could not bring their budget to the floor. That would have been too dangerous.

What about the 12-percent side, the Americans who want to raise taxes? They control the House or, I am sorry, the Americans who want to raise spending, they control the House. Oh, you say, what about taxes? What about the 76 percent who want to keep taxes the same or cut them? Oh, they are not allowed to bring their budget to the floor. What about the 21 percent who want to raise taxes? They get to come to the floor because the Democrats who want to raise taxes control the House.

Well, you say, all right, so they brought taxes to the floor. But did not the Democrats just want to raise taxes on the rich?

Well, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON], a man who is in a State where Governor Florio, a Democrat, has massively raised taxes and Governor Florio today has so offended the people of New Jersey that he has an 18-percent approval rating matched only by Governor Dukakis of Massachusetts, another man who has raised taxes massively and another Democrat.

Mr. SAXTON, representing a New Jersey district, understands how important it is to analyze taxes, and this is a Dear Colleague letter he sent out today. He said, "The attached 1040 form demonstrates how the Rostenkowski plan," that is, the Democrat plan, "compares to the present income tax plan in terms of cost to an American family of four. Forms No. 1 and 2 show the difference for a family of four with a $44,800 taxable income. Now, $44,800 in taxable income is a good income, but it is hardly the rich. It is hardly what most Americans think of as getting wealthy. It hardly fits the speeches we heard from Democrats all day today.

But what would happen under the Democratic tax plan to a family of four with a $44,800 taxable income? Congressman SAXTON goes on to say,

> The added income tax liability under the Democrat plan results from the elimination of an inflation adjustment for tax brackets. Further liability can come from the elimination of an inflation adjustment for the personal exemption.

And this is what it comes to, the income tax goes up directly by $254 under what is called bracket creep.

Bracket creep is something everybody old enough to remember the 1970's remembers; you get pushed up, get pushed into a higher bracket, and you end up paying more of your money in taxes even though your money does not buy as much.

For a family of four $254 in income tax bracket creep under the Democratic plan, and then there is a second bite, because the Democrats freeze the exemption of the deduction for family members so you lose the inflated value, so your real value declines and that costs you another $120, and if there are four of you in the family, about $30 per family member, so if you had three children, you'd go up another $30.

Then you have on people who are self-employed or people who are doing moderately well who are above $51,000, they pay a medicare tax increase, another $145.

In addition, there are excise taxes which are estimated to cost another $120, so here is a family of four with $44,800 in taxable income, and according to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON], that is a total tax increase next year for them of $639, an increase, by the way, which comes out over the 5-year period of the budget to be well over $3,000 for this family of four.

Now, remember, this is a Democratic budget which does not cut one penny, not a penny, out of domestic discretionary spending in Washington. The Appropriations Committees do not lose one dime. They get their full inflation adjusted amount of extra money.

So we are going to say to the average American family, you do not get any extra money for your deductions for a child, and you do not get any extra help in terms of your bracket of tax because of inflation. We are going to take money from you as a family, but we are going to protect the politicians in Washington and the budget that they need so that they can spend your money in Washington.

The fact is simple, the family of four, $44,800 in taxable income, will pay to the Federal Government $639 morese per year under the Democratic plan in higher taxes so that the Democrats who control the House and Senate will be able to spend the money for them.

We will transfer the money to the Government in Washington so that instead of the family back home in Georgia spending it, in the case of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON], the family back in New Jersey spending it, we are going to have the Federal bureaucracy spending it for you.

Another analysis was made of $35,200 of taxable income with a family of a two-earner couple with two children, and this analysis was not by the Republicans, not by the Bush administration, this analysis is by the National Taxpayers' Union. I will enter their analysis into the RECORD. They say:

> A vote for the tax plan proposed by Ways & Means Committee Democrats is a vote for a 7.4% income tax increase for a two-earner couple with two children earning $35,200 of taxable income. It's a vote to make that family pay over $2000 more of new income taxes through 1995. It's also a vote to take away $600 of tax deductions from every family of four filing a tax return. We strongly urge you to oppose these and other new taxes.
> The tax increase aimed at middle class taxpayers in the Democratic alternative would be caused by a one-year delay of the annual inflation adjustment of the personal exemption and the tax rate bracket amounts. It would cut the 1991 personal exemption from $2,200 to $2,050. The 28 percent tax rate bracket would begin at $32,450 of taxable income, instead of the $34,250 required under current law. Millions more middle class taxpayers would find themselves in the 28 percent tax rate bracket.
> Without indexing for inflation, taxes increase because inflation cuts the value of the personal exemption and pushes taxpayers into higher tax brackets.
> Other especially harmful provisions in the proposal include creating a new 33 percent tax rate bracket and a new top rate of over 36 percent.
> The tax increase portion of the Committee reconciliation bill also deserves rejection. It represents a larger tax increase than that proposed by the rejected budget summit agreement.
> Both the Democratic alternative and the Ways & Means Committee recommendation would break the promise of lowering marginal tax rates made in the 1986 Tax Reform Act by increasing the top marginal income tax rate. Both proposals also attempt to paper over Medicare's serious financial problems by increasing the Medicare wage tax cap.
> These higher taxes, and especially higher income tax rates, threaten our economy, which is already in recession in much of the country.
> A more apt name for the reconciliation bill would be the Tax and Fee Increase Act of 1990. The package is composed principally of tax and fee increases while leaving subsidies to businesses, unions, and other special interests essentially untouched.

□ 2450

Notice what the nonpartisan National Taxpayers Union analysis suggests here. It suggests very directly that there are two fates awaiting the middle class workers under the Democrats. If a person gets to keep their job, they are not going to have as much take-home pay because the Democrats will raise the income tax, and they will pay it. On the other hand, they may be even more unlucky, and because of their tax rate increases, they may lose their jobs. Therefore, they will not have to worry about paying the higher Democratic taxes because they will not have a job, and they will not have an income, and they will not pay any taxes at all, at which point the Democrats will propose a massively bigger works program to hire the people for the Government, which will increase the deficit even further.

Now, as I said a while ago, we Republicans had offered a very different approach. We offered an approach that said, "Let's cut spending," and we actually had serious spending cuts in foreign aid, we had serious spending in domestic discretionary, and serious spending cuts in entitlements, a total of $410 billion. But the Democrats did not make it in order. That would not have fit the package. That would have been too dangerous.

Now notice again, not only are these the same House Democrats who made 62 budget waivers in order, as long as they increased spending, not only are these the same Democrats who made 260-page amendment in order that nobody had read, and then rewrote the amendment on the floor by unanimous consent tonight, but let Members look at how carefully they followed the rules under the congressional budget process.

Here is what section 300 of the law says. The timetable with respect to the congressional budget process for any fiscal year is as follows, and it goes through a series of steps, and then it gets to June 10, House Committee on Appropriations report last annual appropriation bill. Democrats failed to meet the schedule. June 15, Congress completes action on reconciliation legislation. By the way, reconciliation legislation which Congress under the law was supposed to complete on June 15, is what we were dealing with tonight. So they clearly did not meet the rules there. June 30, House completes action on the annual appropriations bills. Well, it is October and we are still working on appropriations bills. October 1, fiscal year begins. The fiscal year cannot start yet because we have not passed all the bills, and therefore we have a continuing resolution because the Congress has not gotten its job done.

My point in reading in the timetable is to say this: The Democrats do not mind sliding past the deadlines in law as long as they get to spend more. The Democrats do not mind sliding past the various budget requirements in law as long as they can raise taxes. The only time the rules matter if a person is a Democrat is that somebody comes up with a proposal which will actually cut spending and allow people to avoid raising taxes.

Notice as I said earlier, that we are in a situation where 83 percent of the country wants to cut spending; 76 percent of the country is opposed to tax increases, yet the Democrats insisted on ignoring the public. Part of the mood in the Nation is term limit movement, the number of people who say they want to limit the terms of Congress because Congress is out of step. It is fascinating if we look at the Democrats who voted against their leadership, many of those who voted no, who voted against their leadership are in tough races. There was a pattern established in the vote on the budget summit. If a person did not have a serious race, a majority voted in favor of the budget agreement. If a person were retiring and were not going to run at all, the margin was 14 to 2 in favor of the budget agreement. But what if that person were in a close race? Of the 25 Members who were in a close race, zero voted for the budget agreement and the tax increases, 25 voted against. Now, think about what this means. Three weeks before an election the U.S. House of Representatives, designed to be the People's House by the Founding Fathers in the Constitution, if a person has a serious opponent, and they are worried about reelection, they vote 25 to 0 no. If they are retiring and are not up for reelection, they vote 14 to 2 yes.

In other words, the power structure in Washington could win the vote as long as we do not have an election. The best explanation of this was in a marvelous article on Sunday entitled "Democracy at Work: The tax Revolt of the Masses," by Thomas B. Edsall and E.J. Dionne, Jr. I thought it was the best single article, and I want to read in the RECORD a couple of paragraphs.

> The budget crisis does not grow out of too much politics. It results from the suppression and distortion of politics. Yes, many members of Congress who voted against the first version of the budget deal were responding to pressures from their constituents. There's a name for that kind of behavior: democracy.
> You wouldn't know that from a lot of the commentary on the budget struggles, especially as the original deal was being voted down earlier this month. Members of Congress who voted no were pilloried as irresponsible, cowardly, craven, short-sighted—and worse. The notion seemed to be that worrying about what the voters might think was somehow unseemly.
> "The truth is they are simply listening to their political consultants," declared the able and usually dispassionate Andrea Mitchell on NBC as members of the House prepared to vote down the budget package. Isabel Sawhill, senior fellow at the Urban Institute, contended that "pure political timidity" prevented enactment of a measure that "we might come to love" once in place.

The point that Edsall and Dionne were making in the Washington Post article is that if a person is going to believe in democracy, then they have to believe in free elections. If they are going to believe in free elections, then they have to believe that the American people have some right to have some impact on what happens in the Congress. That may be why the Founding Fathers required elections every 2 years, precisely so all those fancy people at the Georgetown cocktail parties who actually have to go home and actually have to talk to normal everyday Americans and actually find out what they want. And having found it out, maybe they would bring that information into the House Chamber.

Now, what do we find out? We find out, as I said a while ago, 76 percent of the country is against raising taxes, 83 percent of the country is in favor of cutting spending. The Democrats ignored all that and decided to raise taxes and raise spending. In the article by Edsall and Dionne they quoted further,

> So the Democrats still have some deciding to do. "Eventually, [Congressional leaders] have to decide if the Democrats are going to be the party of the middle class," said Stan Greenberg, a Democratic poll taker. "I don't know how many times you can go to the well and come back with taxes for the middle class."

Remember, this is a Democratic culture. Let me read that again, because I thought today's Democratic tax increase bill was a test of this question, reading what Stan Greenberg, a Democratic poll taker said, "I don't know how many times you can go to the well and come back with taxes for the middle class."

What did they do today? They raised, as I said a while ago, depending on who we believe, either according to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON], $639 per year a middle-class family of four, or according to the National Taxpayers Union they managed to raise on a middle-class family with $35,000 in taxable income over $2,000 of new income taxes through 1995. Members decide which of those exact studies they think is more accurate, but both studies point in the same direction, that the Democrat package was, in fact, a package aimed at raising taxes not on the rich but on the middle class.

Now, I happen to think that it is good for Members to listen to the country. I happen to think that it is good for the American people to know what we are doing. I think it is good for them to be able to watch Members on television, to read Members in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to know how we are going, and I think those Americans who watched today know full well because they saw it happen, the Democrats voted to choke off debate on a spending cut budget that the Democrats voted to stop a spending cut budget from even coming to the floor, that having stopped a spending cut budget, the Democrats offered a spending increase and tax increase budget. Those who watched today know that the Democrats had a slogan of taxing the rich, but there was a reality of taxing the working middle class that the spirit of Mondale and Dukakis and Governor Florio is alive in the Congress, and that, in fact, we saw an effort to raise taxes by $199 billion, counting taxes and fees, in order to raise spending in the Committee on Appropriations by $160 billion.

My close is very simple. Those voters who are sick and tired of politicians that do not listen to them, I have an answer. Go vote, ask your local candidate how did they vote. What did they do? There is a real opportunity called an election. A real chance to change some things. As members watched the Democratic Party gag the process today, block the opportunity of choice, stop the spending cuts from coming to the floor, I think every voter should decide if it is not time for a change.

□ 0100

It may be that after 36 years of one-party monopoly by the Democrats, maybe they have grown too tired and too arrogant, too committed to taxes and too committed to spending, but whatever the American people should do, rather than being apathetic, rather than just griping, whether you are going to vote Democrat or you are going to vote Republican, I think every American when they start to complain ought to be asked the question, "Have you registered, and are you going to vote?"

I think if the American people would take the time to turn out and vote in November, they would send a signal that would truly change the Congress, and frankly, the reality is right now that it is your money, but it is their Congress.

The American people work for it. They earn it and then they lose it and cannot take it home with them because Congress raises their taxes. I think that is the lesson of today, and I think the time has come to change it.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3045) to amend title 17 of the United States Code to clarify the remedies available for copyright and mask work infringement, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment added a new section 3 to the House bill. The Senate recedes from the addition of section 3.

Due to a printing error, the word "official" was omitted from the first sentence of proposed section 911(g)(1) of title 17 in H.R. 3045 as passed by the House. The House therefore recedes to sections 1, 2, and 4 of the Senate bill.

1. SHORT TITLE

This section in the House and Senate bills is identical. The House recedes.

2. LIABILITY OF STATES, INSTRUMENTALITIES OF STATES, AND STATE OFFICIALS FOR INFRINGEMENT OF COPYRIGHT AND EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS IN MASK WORKS

This section in the House and Senate bills is identical except for a printing error that omitted the word "official" from the first sentence of proposed 17 U.S.C. 911(g)(1) in the bill as passed by the House.

The House recedes.

3. COSTS AND ATTORNEY'S FEES

This section was added by amendment by the Senate. The amendment limits reimbursement for attorneys' fees and other costs to copyright owners unless the copyright owner falls within one of three specified categories, taken from the Equal Access to Justice Act: a business with a net worth of $5 million or less, with 500 or fewer employees; a tax exempt organization or cooperative association with 500 or fewer employees; or an individual with a net worth of $1 million or less.

The Committee agrees with the Register of Copyrights, Ralph Oman, who described the amendment as unnecessary, since "[a]ward of attorney's fees is discretionary with the courts, and judges generally will not award large fees for the benefit of affluent plaintiffs who sue nonprofit defendants. . . . The states generally would not be assessed attorney's fees anyway."

The Register also advised that the Congress should preserve the discretion of judges to award attorneys' fees where appropriate, in order to "deter abuse by individual state officials, who might otherwise be grossly negligent about respecting the copyright law."

Finally, the Register concluded that "[i]f the states violate the copyright law, they are injuring the property rights of citizens and the status of the citizen should not affect the remedies available. Moreover, by depriving more affluent citizens of attorney's fees, you will discourage some of them from filing lawsuits to vindicate their property rights."

The Senate recedes.

4. EFFECTIVE DATE

This section in the House and Senate bills is identical. The House recedes.

CONSTRUCTION, GENERAL

Amendment No. 14: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $1,050,450,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement appropriates $1,050,450,000 for Construction, General excluding the Red River Waterway project instead of $1,300,389,000 as proposed by the House and $1,215,407,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees have provided $1,000,000 for the Sacramento Flood Control Project to be used by the Corps of Engineers, Sacramento District, to plan, design and construct historical wetlands in the Yolo Basin, California, under the authority of section 1135 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 as outlined in House Report 101-536, Corps of Engineers, Operation and Maintenance, Wetlands Research Program.

The conference agreement includes funding for the projects in the Continuing Authorities Programs listed in the House and Senate Reports. The conference agreement also includes $125,000 for a section 205 flood control study in Pinal County, Arizona, between the Phoenix and Tucson metropolitan areas.

Amendment No. 15: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $4,100,000, which is to be utilized to construct emergency bank stabilization measures including repairs to revetments and realignments upstream of Shreveport, Louisiana, to Index, Arkansas, that were significantly damaged in the May 1990 flood in the Red River Basin

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees are aware of the damages sustained to the revetments and realignment works in the May 1990 flood in the Red River Basin and the need to provide additional bank stabilization to areas not previously protected. Damage to these revetments and realignment works is known to be significant, and early repairs are essential. The Corps of Engineers is directed to survey damages and set priorities on items needing repair. Although the normal maintenance of revetments and realignments above Shreveport, Louisiana, is a local sponsor responsibility, the flood damages incurred are considerably beyond the scope of normal maintenance. Therefore the conferees have provided $4,100,000 for the Red River Emergency Bank Protection project to accomplish needed repairs and to construct new bank stabilization measures.

Amendment No. 16: Earmarks $6,000,000 for the Kissimmee River, Florida, project as proposed by the House instead if $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 17: Earmarks $9,200,000 for the Wallisville Lake, Texas, project and $5,000,000 for the Red River Basin Chloride Control, Texas and Oklahoma, project as proposed by the House. The Senate bill deleted funding for these projects.

Amendment No. 18: Earmarks $1,500,000 for the Platte River Flood and Streambank Erosion Control Demonstration Project, Nebraska, and $975,000 for the San Diego River and Mission Bay, California, project as proposed by the House. The Senate bill deleted funding for these projects.

The conference agreement includes $11,299,000 for the South Williamson element of the Levisa and Tug Forks of the Big Sandy River and Upper Cumberland River project, the same as the budget request. In carrying out the South Williamson element, the conferees direct the Corps of Engineers to include the work described in Feature Design Memorandum No. 18, South Williamson Pump Station, dated July 1988.

Amendment No. 25: Earmarks $975,000 for the Tulsa and West Tulsa Local Protection Project, Oklahoma, as proposed by the Senate instead of $300,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 26: Deletes House language stricken by the Senate that specifically authorizes the Secretary of the Army to repair and restore to a safe condition the Tulsa and West Tulsa Local Protection Project in Oklahoma. This language is not required since the conferees have been advised that the project is authorized.

Amendment No. 27: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate that directs the Secretary of the Army to study, design, and construct streambank protection measures at McGregor Park in Clarksville, Tennessee, using $550,000 of the funds appropriated in the Act.

FLOOD CONTROL, MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES, ARKANSAS, ILLINOIS, KENTUCKY, LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI, MISSOURI, AND TENNESSEE

Amendment No. 31: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $344,606,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement appropriates $344,606,000 for Flood Control, Mississippi River and tributaries instead of $342,731,000 as proposed by the House and $338,993,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees agree with the action taken by the Senate to rename the Yazoo Basin Reformulation Unit as a restudy and direct that the restudy be limited to an examination of alternatives that fall within the scope of the currently authorized Yazoo Basin projects.

The conferees agree with the language contained in the Senate report that clarifies the terms under which the Corps of Engineers is to complete the water balance study for the northwest Mississippi region.

The conferees agree with the House with regard to the need for the comprehensive study of the Alabama-Coosa and Appalachicola-Chattahoochee-Flint River Basins. The conferees note that interim reallocations of storage for water supply may be necessary while the study is being conducted.

The conferees have no objection to the Corps of Engineers proceeding with the review and study of the operation and maintenance program as described in the October 5, 1990, letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works) to the House and Senate committees.

Amendment No. 34: Earmarks $3,630,000 for the Long-Term Management Strategy for dredged material disposal in the San Francisco Bay, California, region as proposed by the House instead of $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 35: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: *: Provided further, That $2,500,000 of the funds appropriated herein shall be used by the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, to continue the development of recreation facilities at Sepulveda Dam, California: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is directed to use $3,500,000 of the funds appropriated herein for the Federal share of construction of access facilities in the McAlpine Lock and Dam navigation pool. REVOLVING FUND

Both the House and Senate committees have previously expressed concern about the costs and justification of the Corps of Engineers Automation Plan (CEAP). As a result, in the Statement of Managers accompanying the FY 1990 Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act, the conferees directed that no further acquisitions for CEAP could be made beyond those required for the pilot test. In a letter dated September 17, 1990, the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works) advised the House and Senate committees of the results of the pilot test. Based on those results, which demonstrated that the benefits of the program exceeded costs and resulted in a revised program with significantly reduced costs, the conferees have no objection to the Corps of Engineers proceeding with further acquisitions for CEAP as outlined in the above referenced letter.

FLOOD CONTROL AND COASTAL EMERGENCIES

Amendment No. 38: Appropriates $20,000,000 for Flood Control and Coastal Emergencies as proposed by the Senate instead of $25,000,000 as proposed by the House.

The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate that deletes House language amending Section 4(t)(3)(F) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1988 and replaces it with Senate language amending the same provision of law. Section 4(t)(3)(F) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1988 provided up to $600,000 in debt relief to the city of Aberdeen, Washington, because the transfer of operation and maintenance responsibility for the Wynoochee Lake project from the Corps of Engineers to the city had been delayed. Language in the House bill extended the period of debt relief until the date of transfer of responsibility to the city. The Senate provision agreed to by the conferees extends the period of debt relief to June 30, 1990, and removes the $600,000 limitation.
